winters since the death of his wife a year and a half ago. Lieutenant R. M. G. Mrs. McKee and Miss Davis were schoolmates and intimate friends.

ADMIRAL YUKO ITO.

The Real Head of the Japanese Navy. His Greatest Victory.

While the names of Togo and Kamimura have been ringing in the ears of men the real head of the Japanese navy, who has planned the campaigns even to the minute details, has remained in the background. He is Admiral Yuko Ito, chief of the naval staff, the man who won the battle of the Yalu and took Port Arthur and Weihaiwei in the Chino-Japanese war ten years ago. Admiral Ito, who is also a count, must not be confused with Marquis Hirobumi Ito, Japan's grand old man, who has been premier for so many administrations and is now at the head of the council of elder statesmen. To distinguish the two the naval man is often spoken of as "Little Ito." Though past sixty he is scarcely at all gray.

Yuko Ito is the ranking admiral of the mikado's navy and, at least till the time that Togo won his Port Arthur victory, was the chief naval hero of Japan. In the eyes of those who know his supreme part in the present war he is still so. He long foresaw the struggle with Russia and laid his plans accordingly. Japan's state of preparedness for the present contest, that has resulted in giving her supremacy of the eastern seas, was largely due to Ito's untiring work.

The battle of the Yalu of 1894, in which Ito was in chief command, was the first great naval clash between modern ironclads and for that reason made the name of the Japanese victor famous around the world. The Japs had twelve vessels engaged, while the Chinese had fourteen warships and six torpedo boats. Despite this disparity in numbers, Ito won a complete victory and practically destroyed the naval power of China. Admiral Ito's flagship, the Matsushima, was in the thick of the fight and sustained severe injuries, so much so that the flag had to be changed to another vessel during the fight. Four of the Chinese vessels were sunk and others injured, the rest escaping in the darkness of the night.

The Chinese then regarded Port Arthur as impregnable, as the Russians have regarded it since. In spite of this conceit Admiral Ito boldly sailed into the harbor, finished smashing the Chinese fleet and took the town. He was also in command at Weihaiwei, where another small Chinese fleet had gathered, which he defeated without losing a man. He then reduced the forts and with the land forces took the stronghold.

JOHN MORLEY'S VISIT

FRIENDSHIP BETWEEN THE AUTHOR AND ANDREW CARNEGIE.

How Mr. Carnegie Shocked the House of Commons—Morley as Gladstone's Right Hand Man—His Literary Achievements.

It is said that Andrew Carnegie was chiefly impelled to his course in the establishment of libraries by the eminent English author and statesman who is now his guest in this country, the Right Hon. John Morley. Mr. Carnegie was an intense admirer of Mr. Gladstone. Since the latter's death he has found inspiration in the statesmanship and scholarship of Mr. Morley, who was the Grand Old Man's most trusted associate. At Skibo castle and at the Langham hotel, which Mr. Carnegie makes his home when in London, the two strange chums can often be heard discussing books and politics, sometimes rather heatedly. When there is a debate on in the house of commons in which Mr. Morley is to take a part Mr. Carnegie makes it a point to be present, and he has been known to travel all night from Scotland in order to hear his friend speak. On one occasion his enthusiasm carried him to the extent of applauding Morley by clapping his hands, which shocked the liveried attendants. When they remonstrated with the American multimillionaire he said he could not promise not to repeat the offense if his friend, Morley, continued to shake the house with his eloquence.

Mr. Morley is conceded to be one of the foremost living writers in the English language and is especially gifted as a biographer. His chief works in this field are his biographies of Edmund Burke, Voltaire, Rousseau, Richard Cobden, Oliver Cromwell and William E. Gladstone. To the last named work, which was published in 1903, he devoted the most of his time for several years, and it is regarded by many as one of the greatest biographies ever written.

Mr. Morley once said in an interview, "Two men have made me—John Stuart

THE RIGHT HON. JOHN MORLEY.

Mill and Mr. Gladstone." When Mr. Gladstone saw that he was to lose Joseph Chamberlain he determined to attach Mr. Morley to his cause. He made him chief secretary for Ireland and a member of his cabinet. Thenceforth Mr. Morley became his right hand man in furthering the policy of self government for Ireland. No statesman was ever more faithful to his political leader than Morley to Gladstone. But he is no mere disciple. He is himself a strong figure. It could be said of him if he were an American that he would rather be right than be president, for he will not surrender his convictions for political expediency. This was shown when he was representing in parliament a borough in which wage earners were powerful. He had been very popular with them, but an issue arose over the proposition to enact an eight hour law, and Mr. Morley found he could not advocate the plan by which it was proposed to bring the system into effect. To the labor delegates who waited upon him he refused to commit himself, and his stand cost him his return to parliament. He was elected afterward from another borough.

Mr. Morley is said to be the first Englishman to step from an editor's desk to a seat in a cabinet. It was in the columns of the Pall Mall Gazette that Mr. Morley first made his mark in politics. In the house of commons he is always listened to with great attentiveness. His voice is clear, resonant and musical.

In composition his addresses are models of English. T. P. O'Connor once wrote: "His speeches have done more to ripen and educate English opinion and to rouse the English conscience than those of any other living man. Their lucidity, their fine diction, their lofty appeal, often their poetic imagery, have made them all sink deep into the public mind."

Many thought that Mr. Morley would be Mr. Gladstone's successor as leader of the Liberal party, but the choice fell upon Lord Rosebery. Mr. Morley is now about sixty-six years of age. He is gracious in manner and genial as a companion, tolerant and sympathetic, patiently listening to others and slow to speak himself. He is popular in English society and is personally liked even when his opinions are not.

When at home Mr. Morley never permits himself to be interviewed. He rarely goes to the theater, and he loves music and books. One of his peculiarities is that he is much opposed to having a horse pull him up a steep hill, and when such a hill is reached the author-statesman gets out and walks.

Fatal Good Fortune.

There is a story told of a miner to whom sudden good fortune brought as sudden death. He was a man who touched ill luck at the start and could not get away from it. Not a grain of gold could he find in his own claim; his capital was exhausted; he could not even obtain a livelihood as a laborer for others. In the depths of despair he went to the owners of a mine long worked out and begged permission to go down the shaft. It was granted. He went down, and 200 feet from the surface he drove in his pick and dislodged something. He came up with it and asked that his find might be examined and weighed. That was done. "Is it all mine?" he asked. It was, they told him. "It's not the government's?" No, it was not the government's. "Nor anybody else's?" No, nor anybody else's. "It all belongs entirely and solely to me?" It did. The nameless wanderer had found one of the biggest nuggets unearthed. It weighed 196 pounds of pure gold. They turned to congratulate him, to find that joy had killed him. The story is said to be true.

Brass Button Acts.

Acts were passed in the reigns of William III., Anne and George I. which made it illegal for any tailor to make or any man to wear clothes with any buttons other than those made of brass appended thereto. The law further enacted that not only should any tailor who committed a breach of it be fined 40 shillings, but also that he should not be able to recover from his customer in a court of law the price of the suit which he had adorned with the offending buttons. The whole object of the act was to protect the Birmingham metal button makers. A case which came before the courts in the year 1854 or 1855, in which a man, on being sued by his tailor, raised a successful defense relying on the acts in question, that the buttons on the clothes which he had ordered were bone and not brass, called attention to the existence of the anachronism, and the restrictions were soon after abolished.—London King.

"Othello" In a Malay Theater.

A correspondent writing in the Australasian thus describes a performance of "Othello" in a Malay theater: "It was all in Malay, of course, but where they had got the European costumes from I cannot imagine. They were of all kinds and descriptions. Othello was dressed as a toreador, with tennis shoes on; Cassio, as Henry VIII.; Iago in a black velvet court suit, with a barrister's wig well down over his nose; Desdemona, in a short Spanish dancing girl's dress; Roderigo, a green Druid's gown, with pink stockings and tanned boots. But the joke of the whole thing was the music. There was a Malay orchestra of banjos, mandolins, etc., but they played scarcely any native music. They all simply love European music, to which they set their own Malayan words. The whole play was interspersed with songs, just like our comic operas."

Ducks and Decoys.

The duck is much more cunning than a great many of its brothers of the bird tribe, and this is the reason that it was found necessary to devise the decoy as a means of luring him within the reach of the gunner. After a few experiences with these dummies the wise bird begins to cultivate a suspicion and makes a critical investigation before he alights in the middle of what appears to be a bunch of birds on a feeding ground. It is no uncommon thing for a flock of ducks sighting a lot of decoys to circle around out of reach of the fowling piece, and, discovering the deception, start off on their journey, to the chagrin of the watching sportsman.

Mothers Praise it.

Mothers everywhere praise One Minute Cough Cure for the sufferings it has relieved and the lives of their little ones it has saved. A certain cure for coughs, croup and whooping cough. A. L. Spafford, Postmaster, of Chester, Mich., says: "Our little girl was unconscious from strangulation during a sudden and terrible attack of croup. One Minute Cough Cure relieved and cured her and I cannot praise it too highly." One Minute Cough Cure relieves coughs, makes breathing easy, cuts out phlegm, draws out inflammation and removes every cause of a cough and strain on lungs. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

The Poetical Indian.

Despite the belief to the contrary the Indians are a poetical people. One evidence of this is the fanciful names they give their rivers. For instance, Mississippi means father of waters; Minnehaha, laughing water; Housatonic, winding waters; Horicon (the Indian name of Lake George) means silver water, and Ohio means fair to look upon.

A Cryptic Advertisement.

The most successful of the great advertising merchants of the United States was the vender of a commodity known as "Plantation Bitters." He devised an enigmatic line, "S.T. 1860. X.," which appeared simultaneously in every American newspaper and periodical of any size, and also on the walls of innumerable barns, fences and trees. One day all the rocks of the Niagara falls were covered with the same mystic sign. Forest trees along the lines of the Pennsylvania railroad were hewn down to afford the passengers a glimpse of the same announcement emblazoned in letters 400 feet high on the mountain side. What did the cabalistic announcement convey? Not until the proprietor had made his fortune did he condescend to explain. "S.T. 1860. X." meant "Started Trade in 1860 with Ten Dollars."

Courtship in New Guinea.

Courtship in New Guinea is begun on very different lines from those of the Caucasian. It is the girl who takes the initiative instead of the youth. When a young man falls in love with a Papuan belle he does not look at her and whenever possible shuns her company. If she appears grieved at such slights the suitor performs various acrobatic feats whenever he thinks she is watching. He will leap into the air, stand on his head or knock down some smaller youth. Should the girl be fascinated by these performances she employs a little girl to carry a nut to her lover, and on the nut she will paint certain emblems indicative of her passion. The nut will also tell where she will meet him that night. At this trysting place the two will eat the nut together and make such arrangements as are necessary for the marriage. All the difficulties of proposing on the European or American plan are done away with in New Guinea.

Niceties of the French Language.

A writer in the Cornhill Magazine has found some delicacies of the French language in a handbook of etiquette for French children. The pupils are warned not to say, "I have been eating cheese and calf's head, monsieur," or "He was riding on a donkey, my lord." This construction of the sentence is "very rude," for it implies an intimate relation between the calf's head or the donkey and the personage who is addressed. To avoid this one should say, "I have been eating cheese, monsieur, and calf's head," or "My lord, he was riding on a donkey." That useful but ridiculous beast must be kept behind the nobleman. Tourists in France must be careful where they put the calf's head or they will imperil the entente cordiale.

An Impossible Condition.

An artist, speaking of the blunders women writers make, said: "I remember that I once had to illustrate for a small publication a woman's story about a brave and amorous Texan cowboy. He loved a fair maiden, whom one day he lifted up before him to the front of his saddle, and they kissed and rode away.

"Poor, unfortunate ladylove! To readers who have seen a Texan saddle no explanation is needed. It comes up in front to a pommel. As for sitting on that peak, I would as soon sit on the point of a spear, especially if the horse were to gallop. I wouldn't ask a puppy dog to sit on that saddlehorn, much less any girl who loved me."—Pearson's.

A Heavy Load.

To lift that load off of the stomach take Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It digests what you eat. Sour stomach, belching, gas on stomach and all disorders of the stomach that are curable, are instantly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. S. P. Storrs, a druggist at 297 Maine street, New Britain, Conn., says: "Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is giving such universal satisfaction and is so surely becoming the positive relief and subsequent cure for this distressing ailment, I feel that I am always sure to satisfy and gratify my customers by recommending it to them. I write this to show how well the remedy is spoken of here." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure was discovered after years of scientific experiments and will positively cure all stomach troubles. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

The Novelist's Quandary.

"Scribbler is in trouble."

"What about?"

"He has written a novel and selected a name for it. His publisher likes the name, but says it does not suit the book, and he can't decide whether to write a new novel or invent a new name."—Brooklyn Life.

Some Differences.

"The difference between a woman and a glass," said the funny fellow, "is that the glass reflects without speaking, while a woman speaks without reflecting."

"And the difference between you and a glass," said the sharp girl, "is that the glass is polished."

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

New Way of Using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Mr. Arthur Chapman, writing from Durban, Natal, South Africa, says: "As a proof that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a cure suitable for old and young, I pen you the following: A neighbor of mine had a child just over two months old. It had a very bad cough and the parents did not know what to give it. I suggested that if they would get a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and put some upon the dummy teat the baby was sucking it would no doubt cure the child. This they did and brought about a quick relief and cured the baby." This remedy is for sale by H. C. Giesler.

Not Humorous.

"I see," said the man, "that you don't use the mother-in-law joke any more."

The Doctor's Affidavit.

An amusing incident occurred not long ago in a certain police court. Two men were summoned for being drunk. Rising to speak on their behalf, their solicitor said: "My clients can prove that they were sober. Upon being told by the police that they would be summoned they at once went off to be examined by a doctor, and I hold in my hand a letter from him which, with your worship's permission, I will now read to the court."

Instantly the solicitor on the other side sprang to his feet and protested against the admission of such a letter as evidence. The objection was held to be a good one; but, the evidence against the men being deemed insufficient in other respects, the case was dismissed. Had the letter been admitted they would undoubtedly have been convicted, for their legal representative had simply "bluffed" the court. The letter from the doctor ran as follows: "The two defendants came to me, and I regret to say that I found that they were both very drunk."—London News.

Two Very Important Acts.

A magazine editor, seeking an increase of circulation, sent to each of his 3,500 subscribers this query: "What was the most important act of your life? Twenty pounds for the best true answer." He received more than a thousand replies, all but one relating some particular deed of which the writer was proud. The exception and prize winner was brief and to the point. "Being born," he wrote. Encouraged by the success of his scheme of advertising, the editor sent out a second query, offering a further twenty pound note for the best answer. This was the question: "Last month you stated what was the most important act of your life; now tell us what is the most important act of your life." The varieties of replies would have made several pages of rare humor, but the winner solemnly wrote, "Breathing."—London Chronicle.

Mr. W. L. The children like to take it and it has no injurious after effect. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

When Hoar Pulled Wires.

"The only time I was ever guilty of wire pulling," said Senator Hoar once to a friend, "was when I so used my influence that Thucydides instead of Herodotus received honorable mention on the facade of the public library in Worcester, Mass., as the representative Greek historian. Why did I want to carry that point? Oh, only because I've always had an especial fondness for Thucydides."

Was not that deliciously characteristic? Is there another man in American public life today who would pull wires for—Thucydides?—National Magazine.

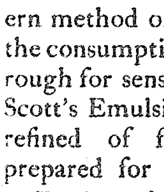
Consumption

Salt pork is a famous old-fashioned remedy for consumption. "Eat plenty of pork," was the advice to the consumptive 50 and 100 years ago.

Salt pork is good if a man can stomach it. The idea behind it is that fat is the food the consumptive needs most.

Scott's Emulsion is the modern method of feeding fat to the consumptive. Pork is too rough for sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion is the most refined of fats, especially prepared for easy digestion.

Feeding him fat in this way, which is often the only way, is half the battle, but Scott's Emulsion does more than that. There is something about the combination of cod liver oil and hypophosphites in Scott's Emulsion that puts new life into the weak parts and has a special action on the diseased lungs.



A sample will be sent free upon request.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

When They Registered "And Lady."

"Some weeks ago I had an opportunity of inspecting the hotel register of a Niagara Falls hotel of the years 1830-32," said a Milwaukee man. "Even at that time the falls seem to have been a favorite resort, but what impressed me most was the style in vogue at that time.

"The chirography was by far better than one sees nowadays on hotel registers, some writing almost resembling steel engraving. I looked all through the register, but found but one instance of a man registering himself 'and wife.' In every other instance it was 'and lady.' Another feature of the register was a column headed 'Remarks,' which was used by guests in making personal notices, some of which were highly interesting. Today we tell our confidences to the clerk."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

REPUBLICAN VICTORY

Almost Unprecedented Landslide.

GOT ALL DOUBTFUL STATES

Republican Leaders Surprised at the Extent of Their Victory.

William L. Douglas, Democrat, Elected Governor of Massachusetts—Democratic Electoral Majorities Are Confined to the Solid South—President Roosevelt Makes a Formal Announcement That He Will Not Be a Candidate For Re-Election—Melvin G. Paliser, Manager of Watson's Campaign, Announces That Steps Will Be Taken at Once to Form a New Party — Proposed Conference of Mr. Bryan, Mr. Watson and William R. Hearst.

New York, Nov. 9.—Theodore Roosevelt's plurality in this, his native state is second only to McKinley's in 1896. It exceeds McKinley's in 1900 by about 41,500. There were cast for him in New York state about 185,000 votes more than for Alton B. Parker.

Not only was his vote heavy in the country districts, where the Republican strongholds are, but in the Greater New York, traditionally Democratic he ran much closer to Judge Parker than had been expected, even by his own campaign managers. It had been estimated that he would come down to the Bronx with better than 140,000 plurality, but the figures showed this forecast would be exceeded by 25,000.

In the city, Parker's supporters had expressed hopes that their candidate would have from 140,000 to 160,000 more than Roosevelt, but in this they were disappointed by more than 100,000 votes. So overwhelming was the Republican vote that the result was known positively early in the evening.

The earliest counties to report made it clear that the Parker vote everywhere fell below Bryan's in practically all the up-state districts. In Greater New York Parker's plurality was from 12,000 to 14,000 larger than Bryan's, but in the state his total vote fell 16,000 short of Bryan's.

The small plurality for Parker in New York City caused great astonishment, the lowest preliminary ante-election estimates having figured that he would go into the Bronx with 100,000 or more. When the reports came in showing that he would lead Roosevelt by only 40,000, they were received with amazement.

The Parker plurality in the city was 35,000 less than was given Herrick, Dem., for governor. In Brooklyn the Republican managers thought Parker might lead Roosevelt, but reports give Roosevelt a plurality. His total vote fell 16,000 short of Bryan's.

There was a great surprise in the proportions of the vote for Higgins, Rep., for governor, he running far ahead of the Odell vote in the counties and winning by about 85,000. His plurality above the Bronx was probably 160,000, while Herrick's in Greater New York aggrregated about 75,000. Herrick did not carry Albany, his home county, nor did Parker carry Ulster, in which he lives.

The result of the election was celebrated in New York in the demonstrative manner characteristic of this city. The large crowds in the streets, satisfied that Roosevelt had been elected, started in early with every noise-producing instrument procurable and soon Broadway and the other great thoroughfares were so congested that traffic was made almost impossible. In the side streets bonfires were lit and bands were hurried into service for impromptu parades. At the Republican clubs receptions and jollification meetings were held and arrangements were started for the customary ratification celebrations.

New York, Nov. 9.—The Republican national ticket has been elected by a vote in the electoral college that will exceed that of 292 given to McKinley in 1900. The result of the balloting was astounding even to the most sanguine of the Republican managers.

Confident as they were of success, they were not prepared for the astonishing figures which followed the closing of the polls, bringing into the Republican column not only all of those states they had claimed as safe for their candidates, but with the possible exception of Maryland, every state classed as doubtful.

Democratic successes are confined to the solid South in which Kentucky is included and Mr. Parker has not carried a single state which did not give its vote to Mr. Bryan four years ago. Returns show that he has lost some of those which the Nebraskan candidate held for his party.

Official figures from some of the Northwest states may slightly change the totals, but based on the returns available at a late hour the electoral vote stands as follows:

As a dramatic climax to the sensational majorities given him, came President Roosevelt's formal announcement that he would not be a candidate for re-election, lending the only exciting aspect to an election night otherwise so one sided that it was impossible for even the victors to attain that degree of enthusiasm which usually marks the occasion. Late in the night came an announcement from Melvin G. Paliser, manager of the campaign for Thomas E. Watson presidential candidate of the People's party, that as a result of the overwhelming Democratic defeats steps would be taken to form a new party. To this end, according to announcement given out, Mr. Bryan, Mr. Watson and William R. Hearst would hold a conference in New York in about a week's time

MR. HIGGINS CONGRATULATED.

Received Election Returns Over Special Wire at His Home.

Olean, N. Y., Nov. 9. — Lieutenant Governor Frank W. Higgins received the election returns over a special wire at his home on South street. When the returns indicated beyond a doubt that the result of the election had been a sweeping Republican victory messages of congratulations from all parts of the state began to pour in. Among theme were telegrams from Governor Odell, M. Linn Bruce, Frank S. Black, Timothy L. Woodruff, Frank S. Hiscock of Syracuse, Francis Hendricks of Syracuse and Francis Gunnison, president of the Union league of Brooklyn

Among others the following were received:

"Washington, Nov. 9.

"Lieutenant Governor Higgins:

"Accept my most hearty congratulations, less for you than the state which gets so worthy and upright a governor. Theodore Roosevelt."

"New York, Nov. 8.

"Governor Higgins:

"There is a God in Israel.

"T. C. Platt."

Geneva, Nov. 9.—Roosevelt carries Geneva by 300. The town of Geneva gives Roosevelt 61 and Higgins 53 plurality.

Amsterdam, Nov. 9. — Amsterdam city complete gives Roosevelt 3,215, Parker 1,923, Higgins 2,965, Herrick 2,192.

Elmira, Nov. 9.—Elmira city complete gives Roosevelt a plurality of 661.

Rochester, Nov. 9.—Rochester city complete gives Roosevelt 22,622, Parker 11,578; same city gave McKinley 18,781, Bryan 14,500.

Gloversville, Nov. 9.—Gloversville city complete gives Higgins 2,733, Herrick 1,662; same city gave Odell 2,439, Coler 1,365.

Syracuse, Nov. 9.—Syracuse complete, 66 districts give Roosevelt 17,194, Parker 9,734, Higgins 16,101, Herrick 11,936.

Rome, Nov. 9.—Rome city complete give Higgins 1,945, Herrick 2,125; same city gave Odell 1,472, Coler 1,906.

Statement by the President.

Washington, Nov. 9. — President Roosevelt after the election returns clearly indicated the result issued the following statement:

"I am deeply sensible of the honor done me by the American people in thus expressing their confidence in what I have done and have tried to do. I appreciate to the full the solemn responsibility this confidence imposes upon me and I shall do all that in my power lies not to forfeit it. On the 4th of March next I shall have served 3¼ years and this 3¼ years constitutes my first term. The wise custom which limits the president to two terms regards the substance and not the form. Under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination."

REPUBLICAN CONGRESS

Recent Majority Will Probably Be Doubled.

IT WILL PROBABLY REACH 60.

In Practically All Districts Republicans Have Held Their Own While Democrats Have Lost In Significant Instances, Particularly In the State of California.

Washington, Nov. 9—President Roosevelt is assured of his co-operation of a Republican congress. The present Republican majority in that body is 34, and there need be no surprise if this figure is almost doubled, and it is reasonably certain to reach a majority of at least 5.

In practically all districts the Republicans have held their own, while in some significant instances the Democrats have lost. Probably the most marked of those cases are the fourth and fifth districts of California, now represented by Hope, Livernash and Wynn, Dems.

President Received the News.

Washington, Nov. 9.—Surrounded by his family and a company of personal friends, President Roosevelt received the news of his overwhelming victory.

The first information of a definite character was received by the president while he was at dinner in the nature of assurances that he had carried New York, his home state, by a plurality so large as to be really astounding. While the president was gratified, it may be said the result was not entirely unexpected.

He was in the best of spirits, but at no time did he manifest the slightest nervousness or anxiety.

Assured, as he said, that the campaign had been conducted on a plane of principle and patriotism, as lofty as he himself would have it and that everything had been done which legitimately could be done to insure the success of the principles which had been promulgated by the Republican party and by himself, he had awaited with perfect confidence the verdict of the people.

At 10:15 o'clock the president left his guests at the White House and went to his private office. There he greeted cordially a large number of corps of Washington correspondents who had been awaiting him. He chatted freely with them about the result of the election making no attempt to conceal his great gratification at the victory which had been won.

Among the messages received by President Roosevelt was one from his running mate on the Republican ticket, Senator Charles W. Fairbanks. It read:

"The Hon. Theodore Roosevelt:

"Accept my heartiest congratulations upon your well deserved and magnificent victory. Your election is the logical result of your splendid administration. May the four years to come be marked by widespread happiness and prosperity. Mrs. Fairbanks joins me in best wishes to Mrs. Roosevelt and yourself.

"Charles W. Fairbanks."

As state after state in its Republican majority and the wires told the tale of the ballots, bringing even from those commonwealths upon which they had based their figures of Democratic success, reports of unprecedented Republican majorities, they frankly conceded their defeat and offered no explanation. Soon after Mr. Belmon't admission Judge Parker acknowledged the situation by telegraphing President Roosevelt his congratulations.

Beginning with the state of New York, which gives a Republican plurality of approximately 185,000, the tale runs practically throughout the country, Kentucky alone showing Democratic gains. Indiana is credited with at least 40,000 plurality, Iowa 125,000, and Pennsylvania heads the list as the banner Republican state, with the magnificant plurality of 325,000. Even in the Southern states the vote has been light, Georgia's Democratic majority being only between 30,000 and 40,000. Texas will probably not exceed 100,000. Nevada, which was carried by Mr. Bryan four years ago, is Republican, and the indications are that Montana, Idaho and Colorado, also Democratic in 1900, have gone back into the Republican column. Delaware is elected at about 50,000 Republican, Massachusetts about 90,000, and Connecticut in which the more sanguine of the Democratic leaders claimed to have had hopes, is about 25,000.

While on the national ticket the Democrats have suffered a crushing defeat, they have retrieved themselves on some state tickets. They have reversed the national vote by electing governors in Massachusetts,

Parker Received the News.

Esopus, Nov. 9.—Judge Parker received the returns at his Esopus. He appeared to be not at all downcast by the result, although it is known that he greatly deplored his overwhelming defeat in his own state. He received the discouraging news in his study where he sat smoking with two of his neighbors.

In the village of Esopus there was genuine grief manifested by Democrats, who gathered in the two inns and the railway station and at the discouraging character of the returns Many had foreseen the result as based upon the returns for the village, which Judge Parker had failed to carry by 14 votes. The bonfire prepared for the occasion was not lighted. A large number of Democrats had placed wagers on the national ... and local pride in the candidate had made betting even. In few instances ... odds been asked or given.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia, Nov. 9.—The Republicans have made an almost complete sweep in Pennsylvania, carrying the state for Roosevelt and Fairbanks by over 300,000 and electing 25 of the 26 state senators and 29 of the 32 congressmen.

They have also elected about 175 of the 204 members of the house of representatives. This gives them control of both branches of the legislature by a large majority, insuring the election of Governor Pennypacker's appointee, Philander C. Knox, for United States senator, to succeed the late M. S. Quay.

John P. Elkins, Republican, is elected state supreme court judge by a majority almost as great as that cast for the Republican national ticket. The Republicans have also carried nearly all the judicial districts in which elections were held for common pleas judges and the five counties in which

For a presidential year the election in Philadelphia was very uiet. The Republican candidates swept eveqrything before them. After the polls closed the Republican leaders claimed that the national, state and city candidates carried the city by pluralities of more than 125,000.

The only semblance of a fight was within the Democratic party where a faction calling themselves the "Independence party" opposed the regular Democrats on the city and legislative tickets.

The Republicans have carried all the counties and districts in which fusion was effected between the Democrats and citizen party and the counties in there were independent movement.

Estimates have been received from 37 of the 67 counties. These show Republican gains of 23,271 and Democratic gains of 2,325. The Republicans made gains in 29 counties and the Democrats in eight. Heavy gains were made in Luzerne, Lackawanna, Schuylkill and other counties in the anthracite coal region. The miners generally voted for Roosevelt, which materially helped the Republican candidates for congress and legislature in these counties.

The most surprising of all the reports, however, came from the fifth and fifteenth Missouri districts, both strongly Democratic, and the former represented by Mr. Cowherd, chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee. The Republicans claims to have carried both districts. In the light of these reports a Republican majority of 50 in the House is considered a conservative estimate. Returns from the Southern states show that they have returned the usual Democratic majorities on congressmen as on other candidates.

There are several solid Republican delegations already reported from Northern states, including Iowa, (with one possible exception) Kansas, Minnesota, New Hampshire and the two Dakotas. To these must be added the delegations from Maine, Oregon and Vermont, in which states elections were held prior to today. Other states, such as Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and even Indiana and New Jersey, from which the Democrats hoped for much in the way of gains, again sending to congress delegations which are preponderatingly Republican. In New York the Republicans will suffer no loss and will gain several congressmen, and they will make a gain of at least two in New Jersey and other gains are reported from Maryland and West Virginia.

Parker Congratulates the President.

Esopus, Nov. 9.—At 8:30 p. m. last night Judge Parker sent this telegram to the president:

"Rosemount, Esopus, Nov. 8.

"The President, Washington, D. C.

"The people by their votes have emphatically approved your administration and I congratulate you.

"Alton B. Parker."

Washington, Nov. 9. — President Roosevelt's reply to Judge Parker's telegram was as follows:

"Alton B. Parker, Rosemount, N. Y.

"I thank you for your congratulations. Theodore Roosevelt."

In the President's County.

Mineola, L. I., Nov. 9.—Roosevelt's plurality in Nassau county will be close to 3,000. Republicans have undoubtedly elected William W. Cocks to congress and W. G. Miller to the assembly. Roosevelt carried his own town, Oyster Bay, by about 600.

WASHINGTON.

Olympia, Nov. 9.—Albert E. Mead for governor and Charles E. Coon for lieutenant governor and the entire Republican state and national tickets have been elected by about 10,000 plurality.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Charleston, Nov. 9.—Returns received thus far indicate that the Republicans have carried the home state of Vice Presidential Candidate Davis by about 11,000 plurality.

PUBLIC LIBRARY

What Has Been Accomplished During the Six Years of Its Existence—It Is Hoped the Dawn of Another Anniversary will See It Housed in Its Own Building.

Six years ago this Wednesday, the Fulton Public Library was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies, and on Nov. 17, 1898, the first book was taken from its shelves by a borrower. The beginning was ever so humble, and had it not been for the late M. H. Brando, perhaps not until this day would our home public have enjoyed the benefits and privileges of a free Public Library. Mr. Brando urged, worked, begged, until his ambition for the masses in this city became a reality, and the indispensible adjunct to our educational life, stands as a memorial to his memory. The Board of Trustees of the Library has remained the same throughout the six years, with one exception, Mr. Thomas Hunter was selected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of ~~[illegible]~~. Mr. E. R. Redhead, as president; Mr. Arvin Rice as secretary and treasurer and Messrs. A. J. Snow, Thomas Hunter and B. G. Clapp, have faithfully served, not only as an advisory committee, but as financiers as well, and to them should be accorded a liberal meed of praise for the splendid proportions to which the library has grown. Commencing six years ago with 1,877 volumes and just sufficient shelving to accommodate them, it has increased until on June 30, the close of the fiscal year, the volumes numbered 4,724, and there had been added thirteen sections of shelving with six shelves to a section, and there is not a square inch of unoccupied space at present.

Figures are rarely ever interesting [illegible] quate idea of its importance to the residents, or the amount of labor entailed in its management without them. The total circulation for the past six years has been 121,065; this only indicating the number of books taken from the library for perusal in the homes. No accurate record has been kept of the reference books, magazines, etc., used in the library, but a rough estimate places it at at least 5,000. This does not include the hourly use of dictionary and encyclopaedia. The total number of borrowers for the six years is 2,893. A recent valuable acquisition to the library was forty volumes willed by the late Sarah Warner.

It is hoped and expected that before the seventh anniversary dawns, the library will be housed in a $15,000 structure, donated by Mr. Andrew Carnegie and made possible by the action of the Common Council in appropriating $1,500 per year for its maintenance, and the generosity of our residents in contributing the funds with which to purchase the site. The library has been supported thus far by voluntary contributions, with the exception of $500 from the city each year since 1902, and $100 from the State, and it is marvelous to contemplate how far each dollar has been made to go in the purchase of books, periodicals and the other necessaries.

To the efficient Librarian, Mrs. Helen Emens, more than to any other must be attributed the high standing which our library has acquired in the State. She has been tireless in her endeavors to promote the best interests of her charge and her economical, intelligent efforts have made possible more rapid strides toward completer equipment each year than even the most ardent admirer of the project could conceive. Assistant State Library Inspector, Mr. Yost, of Albany, at the time of his visit to the library in February, said that he had never seen a better conducted library for the size than our own, and he gave Mrs. Emens full credit for its excellence. That he reported favorably at Albany has been evidenced by the number of requests since received from other towns and cities, for copies of the Finding List and information relative to classification of books and conduct of the library in general.

The free library project received many sneers and words of condemnation when it was first launched, but we doubt if there is now one person within the city limits so narrow that they cannot see its utility and the vast benefit and assistance it has been. Its volumes of fiction have shortened many a weary hour for the sick; its books of reference have aided many a student and instructor, who could not have afforded to buy the needed volume; its stories of travel, adventure and history have proven both education and inspiration to all ages and classes, while its periodicals and papers have kept even the poverty striken in close touch with men and events of today.

Who would see the Fulton Free Library pass out of existence.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

First Meeting of the Season Prelude to Many Enjoyable Sessions.

The first meeting of the Current Events Club for the season was held last Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Benedict. The leaders were to have been the Revs. [illegible] D. Robinson and C. J. Taft, but Mr. Taft was unable to be present.

Mr. E. R. Redhead, as chairman, in calling the meeting to order, referred to the pleasure the meetings had afforded last season and hoped they would furnish a like degree of enjoyment during the ensuing year. He did not wish to be considered dictatorial but suggested that as far as practicable a written treatise on any subject under discussion should be avoided and the members adhere to extemporaneous or oral discussion. In his judgment, the more informal the meetings were, the more enjoyable they would become. This would give an opportunity to the members to ask questions and tend to round out the sessions, making them even more interesting. He jocously stated that he was averse to serving more than one term as president but believed that the other officers should be retained permanently.

Mrs. George Chauncey, as chairman of the Executive Committee, stated that there were four vacancies in the list of membership and proposed Mr. and Mrs. Arvin Rice, Miss Mary Snow and Professor Moore of the High School. The foregoing were unanimously elected. Mr. Robinson, on being introduced, said that he understood the great secret of success in any enterprise lay in the promoter's ability to secure the co-operation of capable assistants. He had therefore called to his aid Mr. John Hunter, who would present the Anglo-Russian difficulty and its peaceful settlement; the progress of the Japanese-Russian war by Mr. F. D. Van Wagenen, and the meeting of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, recently held in Syracuse, by Mrs. C. J. Bacon.

Mr. Hunter gave a detailed account of the sailing of the Russian Baltic [illegible] vessels. He thought that few on this side of the Atlantic appreciated that fact that two of the greatest nations of the earth narrowly escaped war because of the incident. It was a matter for congratulation that so serious a difficulty could be referred to the Hague tribunal, with the understanding that the decision would be final. This, he thought, would be a happy termination of the difficulty and was in accord with the reign of the "Prince of Peace."

Mr. Van Wagenen gave a comprehensive description of the geography of the scene of hostilities in Manchuria; the economic conditions existing in Japan and Russia; the marvelous efficiency exhibited by the Japanese in the mobilizing of their vast army: their clock-work regularity in carrying out every detail of transportation; the furnishing of the sinews of war, etc., and the inefficiency of the Russian staff. The battles between the contending forces were the greatest the world had ever known and the loss of life was appalling.

Mrs. C. J. Bacon referred to the meeting of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs. There were 233 clubs in the federation, and the various subjects discussed were matters of the supremest moment, embracing higher education, pure foods, household economics, and the matter of the establishment of a trade school for girls. Owing to the lack of money necessary for the successful carrying out of this project, it was held in abeyance.

In closing, Mr. Robinson called attention to the separation of the church and State in France and the present controversy in Scotland between the United and a remnant of the Free Church over the rightful ownership of vast tracts of land and church property.

Mr. Redhead announced that the next meeting would be held at the home of the Hon. and Mrs. T. D. Lewis, and the leaders would be Messrs John Hunter and W. E. Hughes.

FORT BREWERTON

Hon. T. D. Lewis Secures Preservation of Historic Site By Special Legislation---Interesting History.

On February 20, 1903, the Hon Thomas D. Lewis of Fulton, introduced in the New York Assembly a bill to provide for the acquisition by the State of New York of the site of Fort Brewerton, in the town of Hastings, Oswego County, and committing it to the custody of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society. It failed to become a law at that session.

On February 15, 1904, he introduced the bill again, and it passed, becoming chapter 653 of the Laws of 1904. It appropriated $2,000 for the purchase of the historic site.

In accordance with the terms of the bill, and with resolutions adopted by the Trustees of the Society, May 23, the acting President, Mr. Logan, made formal application to the Commissioners of the Land Office, July 18, to take title to the property. On Sept. 29 and 30, Deputy State Engineer William Pierson Judson, who, by a happy coincidence is President of the Oswego Historical Society, accompanied by the Secretary of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society, visited Fort Brewerton and made the preliminary arrangements for the purchase. On October 5, the Deputy State Engineer reported favorably on the proposed purchase, and the final action of the Land Commissioners is expected in the near future.

In recognition of Mr. Lewis' public-spirited services in securing the legislation, he has been unanimously elected an honorary member of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society.

The fort itself, is situated on the west side of the main highway, about 150 feet north of the right bank of the [illegible]

The first white explorers of this region were not slow to discover, what the Indians had known from time immemorial, that there was an almost unbroken water route surrounding the great mountain region of Northern New York. An Indian, starting in his canoe from Lake Ontario down the St. Lawrence, could ascend the Richelieu (or Sorel) river to Lake Champlain; paddle thence up Wood Creek to within a short distance of the Hudson at Fort Edward; make a short carry; then proceed by the way of the Hudson and the Mohawk rivers to the site of the present city of Rome; there make another short portage to Wood Creek No. 2, and thence paddle at leisure down Wood Creek, through Oneida Lake, down the Oneida river (called Onondaga river in early days) to the Oswego river, and thence to Lake Ontario again. This water-circuit, which has since been completed by the cutting of the Champlain and Erie canals, is the relic of the submergence which geological ages ago made the Adirondack country an island.

The portage from the Mohawk to Wood Creek was called by the Indians the Great Carrying Place. Where Brewerton and Fort Brewerton are now located, on the outlet of Oneida Lake, the great North and South trail, leading from the mouth of the Salmon river to the Onondaga country, crossed. This was a famous place of passage, for Indians going north and south by land or going east and west by water. It was natural, therefore, that an Indian village should be located here, particularly as the waters of the river and lake teemed with fish, and the woods with game. This Indian village was named Techiroguen. Le Moyne mentions it in 1654 as on the south side of the river, while Charlevoix indicates it by name on the north side, on his map published in 1774.

Not only do the written histories refer to this as a famous crossing place for the Indians and a favorite fishing and hunting ground of the Onondagas, but the aborigines have left eloquent memorials of the fact in the abundant relics which are found there. One can pick up stone arrow-heads at Fort Brewerton almost anytime, and a little care and trouble yields even more interesting mementos. A druggist in Brewerton village, has an extensive collection of Indian implements of various kinds found in the neighborhood. Opposite the fort site, on the east side of the plank road highway, there was not long ago a large burial mound which must have contained the remains of thousands of Indians.

The white man quickly perceived the advantages of the Mohawk, Oneida and Oswego river route as a communication between the Hudson river and Lake Ontario, for both trading and military purposes; and in 17:7 Governor Burnet obtained permission from the Indians to erect a "strong house" at Oswego. This was the beginning of the several Oswego fortifications which guarded the Ontario end of the route. Later, they built Fort Stanwix at the Great Carrying Place (now Rome) between the Mohawk river and Wood Creek. This guarded an important point in the route to the Eastward. During the French and Indian war, the interval between these two points was strengthened by the erection of a post at Oswego Falls on the Oswego river; Fort Brewerton at the western end of Oneida Lake; the Royal Blockhouse at the eastern end of Oneida Lake, and Fort Bull on Wood Creek. Most if not all of these intermediate forts were built in 1759. Fort Brewerton was built in that year. When the French heard of the preparations for these erections, the Governor of Canada endeavored to incite the Indians to prevent them. At an Indian counsel held by Sir William Johnson at Canajoharie, April 18, 1759, Conoquieson, an Oneida chief, revealed the machinations of the Governor of Canada, saying to Sir William:

"Brother, Sometime ago an Oneida Indian in the French interest, who lives at Swegachy prevailed upon [illegible] of our people to go [illegible] them as follows:

"Children, I have sent for you to impart an affair to you of the utmost consequence to your future welfare and safety in particular, and to that of the five nations in general, as I sincerely interest myself in everything which concerns your confederacy.

"Children, the matter I am to reveal to you is, you may depend upon it, a certain truth and of such importance, that I could hardly find words sufficient to express my concern about it; you know the English have built a Fort at the Oneida Carrying place; I am now to inform you that they propose to build one at each end of the Lake Oneida, another at the Falls on the Onondago river. These forts will be strong and well garrisoned, but the fifth which they propose to build will be at Oswego, which will be

REPUBLICANS CELEBRATE

Uniformed Clubs Make a Splendid Showing—Plenty of Red Fire, Skyrockets and Enthusiasm.

The Republicans of this city held a jubilation last Friday evening in honor of the splendid victory achieved at the polls. Mr. Edward P. Cole perfected the arrangements on this side of the river, and Mr. George Fisher co-operated for the west side. Every detail was admirably worked out so that there was not a hitch in any of the proceedings.

The torchlight procession formed about 8 o'clock at Republican Headquarters on First street, and led by Marshals Drs. Marsh and Haviland, and the Citizen's Band, proceeded up First street to the bridge, where they were joined by the Granby Escort. The order was as follows:

Citizen's Band
Hunter Arms Gun Squad
Continental Drill and Bugle Corps
Granby Escort with Drum Corps
Fantastics
Citizens' Float of Victory, containing Gongs, etc.

The line of march was as follows: First street (Upper Falls) to Chestnut, Chestnut to Fourth, down Fourth to Broadway, Broadway to Third, Third to Pine, Pine to Second, Second to Leitch, Leitch to Fourth, Fourth to Broadway, Broadway to First, First to Worth, Worth to Fourth, Fourth to Hannibal, Hannibal to Oneida, Oneida to Third, Third to Broadway, Broadway to Fourth, Fourth to Cayuga, Cayuga to First, First street to City Hall. The residences of Republicans along the route were also brilliantly illuminated. A dense crowd cheered the uniformed clubs as they performed intricate military evolutions.

MAYOR FOSTER'S SUMMARY.

Important Document for Taxpayers Showing What Has Been Accomplished By the Outgoing Republican Administration.

The following letter to the Common Council should be read by every taxpayer. It is a comprehensive statement of what has been accomplished by the outgoing Republican administration. Few can appreciate the many difficulties there were to contend with in the transformation from a village corporation to a civic government, but every exigency has met and Mayor Foster deserves the gratitude of every fair-minded man in this city for the able manner in which he and his associates have discharged their full duty:

To the Common Council of Fulton:—

As I am about to retire from the office of mayor, I take this opportunity to thank you for the many kind considerations and uniformly courteous treatment extended me while associated with you, though we have differed over details yet your efforts have been conscientiously devoted to the best interest of the city, and I trust during the remaining period of your term that your work will be such as to do you still further credit.

I wish also to thank the several boards of my appointment for so earnestly aiding and supporting my efforts, and I do especially thank the citizens of Fulton for their kind treatment, encouragement and forbearance. To each and all of you I hereby briefly submit the following report, relative to the past administration of the affairs of the city, some information from my experience of the working of the new charter and such recommendation as seems fit for me to make.

It is evident that the intent of the charter is to concentrate the important work of the city, and eliminate the possibility of conflict from too many minds, to the end that improvements and the conduct of the several departments may be more successfully carried out than under the uniform village charter. The authority, duties and limitations of each department is well defined and reasonably well safe-guarded.

That there are blunders and conflicting terms in the make up of the charter is true, and no doubt in time will be corrected, but upon the whole, I believe it to be a model of its kind, and the citizens of Fulton will enjoy benefits made possible by the city charter that was not possible under the village law.

Bear in mind that the chances for abuse and extravagance is possible, but can be controlled by the mayor, therefore, the importance of a judicious selection for this office always.

Perhaps the most important department and entailing the largest amount of uncompensated labor and responsibility is the board of public works, to whom is solely trusted the care of the water works system, the lighting of the streets and the public places, care and improvements of the streets, building and grading sidewalks, the care and building of sewer systems, bridges, etc.

The important expenditure likely to be made in this department is for the permanent street improvements, such as macadam, asphalt and brick paving. As this can only be done by the consent of the property owners along the street or section of the street, where such improvement is contemplated and to whom two-thirds of the expense frontage thereof is assessed to such property owners, it is fair to presume that no abuse of this work will occur, and it is eminently to the advantage of the city to pay its portion of such improvement. I can only fear that the street improvements will be limited under this arrangement.

I would recommend, when it becomes possible, that the plan of ten-year bonds as provided for by the charter be adopted for the payment of such improvement, otherwise the work will be limited to few streets, where the property owners can afford to pay the assessment in lump.

The department of education, while involving the expenditure of a large amount of money and directs and controls the affairs which more nearly appeal to and affect each home, yet it is of that nature that by a properly appointed board to give the least trouble and anxiety. [illegible] provided for this department, as [illegible] other, namely, that the estimate of the expenses cannot be controlled by the common council. Thus, contemplating a high standard of efficiency and honesty, without political or religious affiliation should compose the members of this board.

The board of fire and police commissioners, who have charge of the police and fire department, have a well systematized police force, who have done good work in maintaining order and preventing crime, and I believe have given very general satisfaction. A provision of the charter required these commissioners to organize a paid fire department, and as yet they have not done so, for reasons beyond their control, which will be explained later on, but I will mention in connection with this matter that the city has suffered no disadvantage in consequence of their inability to organize a paid fire department, as the well systematized volunteer service has met promptly and efficiently every requirement.

While a paid fire department is in the line of progression, the charter permits of no discretion on the part of the commissioners as to the number of men employed, or their compensation. Under the limitation of 1½ per cent. assessment, it has so far been impossible to provide for this department and much difficulty is encountered under the civil service law for the proper arrangements of service.

The department of charity has been cared for in a humane, intelligent and careful manner. An important part of its work has been in the prevention of unnecessary expenses.

The health department has been managed with the care that is commendable. The quick control of contagious diseases and prevention of same has been fully met. The working of this department is necessarily prevention. For ability, intelligence and integrity in the management of the several departments, I give my unqualified approval.

The makers of the city charter very justly contemplated a sewer system for the west side, and provided that bonds may be issued for the payment thereof, but unfortunately when constituted a city, it was found to be already overbonded by the limit of 10 per cent. under the State constitution, and it has been found necessary to delay the construction until the payment of water bonds to reduce the total bonded indebtedness and the increased valuation of real estate were sufficient for a still further issue of bonds, otherwise the one other method of procuring the funds would be by an abnormal increase of the assessed valuation of real estate, which I believe would be a calamity to the taxpayers, as it would increase proportionately and unnecessarily the county taxes, and our proportion of town bonds amounting to many thousands of dollars yearly, and would no doubt continue to do so.

I have not felt justified in imposing such a burden upon the taxpayers for the earlier commencement of the sewer system. While I know that the delay in commencing the work has met with much disapproval, yet I think without full consideration or understanding of the matter, the work can be prosecuted in a reasonable way without unnecessary burden to the taxpayers. Surveys and plans have been made and approved of by the State department of health and a contract let for the trunk system.

It has been the policy of this administration to make each year reasonable, but not a burdensome amount of permanent street improvements, and I trust the precedent so established in this work will be continued by our successors. In such construction the reduction of grades created by chance, to lines of properly considered drainage, street intersections, etc., temporarily creates much disturbance, where affected unfavorably, but this dissatisfaction will be of short duration as the work when completed usually proves its wisdom.

During this administration there has been built about five and one-half miles of sidewalk, over one-third of which on the west side, and the balance on the east side. One thousand dollars has been expended in permanent crosswalks. Sections of First, Third and Fourth streets have been permanently improved.

The Storer contract has been eliminated and an all night service under reasonable conditions is established. Important improvements and extensions have been made in the water works system. $3,000.00 of its earnings have been used for sidewalk improvement. Every dollar of water rents has been promptly collected, and we have the handsome balance of $20,000.00 cash to its credit.

The city of Fulton as compared with the villages of Fulton and Oswego Falls has added the expense of a paid police department, paid collector or chamberlain, paid civil service board. The payment of one-third walk constructions and other minor things incident to a city charter and I invite your comparison of the amount of taxes collected.

Respectfully,
J. A. Foster, Mayor.

GRACE CHAPEL.

Seventeenth Anniversary and Interesting History.

October 31, 1904, was the seventeenth anniversary of the opening of Grace Mission Chapel, and as its establishment was the beginning of great good in this city, it is fitting that more than casual mention should be made of the event.

The Rev. Samuel Green, who more than any one else, has made possible the great success from a moral and religious standard of this chapel, and who has given the very best years of his life to the cause, has prepared a brief resume of the early history of the Chapel and its advancement, which we are sure will be read with interest by all.

Editor Times: Nearly a score of years ago, I called at the home of Chris Powell on the flats. His wife was very ill. By her bedside were Mrs. Judge Tyler and Mrs. J. B. Dyer, ministering to her needs. She was then dying and her death was wonderfully triumphant. This made such an impression on these ladies, that when Mrs. Tyler was dying she sent for me, and after speaking of the great need of the flats, she besought me with great earnestness to commence Sunday school and religious services in this long neglected neighborhood.

On the 31st of Oct., 1887, a service was held in a cottage with eight children and three men, who were addicted to the use of intoxicants, as congregation. These services were so successful that they have been continued from that date to the present.

A room was rented, and seats provided of soap boxes and planks. Christians, without respect to creed, freely gave their services, and the result in changing the lives, homes and the community were wonderful and permanent. When this became apparent, a subscription was started and a chapel built, and on the 12th of May, 1889, Grace Chapel was dedicated as a non-sectarian place of worship and placed under the personal care of the pastor. Twice has it been enlarged. The recent extension being a gymnasium, aided by athletic fur nishment and kitchen conveniences. The opportunities for doing good are unlimited because it adapts its methods as no other agency, to win the neglected.

It was an unexpected kindness and honor to have a chapel built and placed in my care without a trustee. But it brought with it an abundance of responsibility as well as success for an ordinary mechanic, in addition to daily occupation, to maintain gospel services in Grace Chapel, to visit in homes, and to build up a large Sunday school.

After the labors of three years I was taken very ill, but was nursed and prayed back to health. As we had but one object in view, to lead the people to be christians, we had but one book of instructions to follow—the New Testament. This has made the work very easy and simple. We have never taught a creed or a sect, but faith in Christ alone. By this, home and individuals have been changed. Lately I have been obliged to discontinue some of the services on account of my inability to give them proper attention, but the Sunday school has been conducted continually. The city of Fulton needs a paid City Missionary; there is work to be done that cannot be done by a sectarian institution; there are numbers of persons who can be led to believe in Christ and his teachings who cannot believe a creed; such a home is offered in Grace Chapel.

Samuel Green.

Mr. Green is not enjoying robust health at present, but his interest in the chapel and its attendants never flags. He is looking hopefully forward to the time when he will again be able to take up active duties and continue Christ's work of holding Divine services in the chapel each Sunday.

Only Makes a Bad Matter Worse.

Perhaps you have never thought of it, but the fact must be apparent to every one that constipation is caused by a lack of water in the system, and the use of drastic cathartics like the old fashioned pills only makes a bad matter worse. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets are much more mild and gentle in their effect, and when the proper dose is taken their action is so natural that one can hardly realize it is the effect of a medicine. FORT BREWERTON larger and stronger than any of the others.

Hon. T. D. Lewis Secures Preservation of Historic Site By Special Legislation---Interesting History.

"Now, children, when these forts are all finished and the English have brought their scheme to proper ripeness they intend to throw off the mask, and by the security of this line of forts to fall on Five Nations suddenly from every one of them and extirpate your whole confederacy. This scheme I know to be intended and that your utter destruction is projected. Be therefore on your guard and in order that you may be armed against this destructive design I here present you with a hatchet (meaning a Belt of Wampum with ye figure of hatchet work on it) for you to use against the English and thereby prevent the destruction which they are meditating against you."

The chief, however, gave the hatchet belt to Sir William Johnson and affirmed his friendship for the English; so the building of Fort Brewerton and its sister fortifications proceeded.

Fort Brewerton was built by detachments from Oswego and Fort Stanwix under the direction of Captain Brewerton, whose name it bears. It was an eight-sided, or rather, an eight pointed fortification with sixteen faces, judging from the present ground plan. Walking on the parapet to-day, each face measures about 30 feet from the tip of the salient angle to the corresponding re-entrant angle, making a tour of the parapet measure about 480 feet. From the tip of one salient angle to the tip of the next it is about 50 feet, so that the periphery of the octogon would be about 400 feet. The breastwork was originally about 4 feet high, and was surmounted by palisades of sharpened posts, 20 feet high, pierced with loopholes. As the fort field has never been ploughed or cultivated, this breastwork is still distinctly traceable, in places being two feet high. About two years ago, the last owner of the property, Eben G. Gale, planted maple trees upon the eight salient angles of the fort, and these serve as convenient markers to indicate the outline of the fort in the existing pictures.

Outside of the palissaded fort was a moat which is now some four feet deep on the western side. Still farther out was a second and lower breastwork, of which no traces now remain. About 30 rods east of the fort was a magazine connected with the Fort by a tunnel. Another tunnel ran from the Fort to the river. In the middle of the Fort was a well. The work stood on an elevation about twenty feet above the level of the river with ground sloping gradually toward the waters edge.

About half a mile to the eastward, at the mouth of the lake, a rough wall of large rocks was built from the shore of the lake southeastward into the water for a considerable distance and at the outer end was a sentry box. Here a sentinel kept regular watch of the lake and river.

During the remainder of the French and Indian war, Fort Brewerton was an important station as a shelter for troops passing between the Hudson and Lake Ontario, as a depot of military supplies, and as a protection for the frontier. The struggle between the English and French for the possession of this route was of a most desperate and critical character, and every post which defended it was of great value. It may be claimed with justice that Fort Brewerton, though not so elaborate a work as Fort Stanwix on the one side or the Oswego forts on the other side, was an important factor in preventing the successful invasion of the French, and while Fort Stanwix and many other fortifications in the chain have become obliterated, the remains will attest, for many years yet to come, the part which she and her sisters played in the epoch marking days of the eighteenth century.

At the close of the French and Indian war, the fort was not demolished as the English had promised when they secured permission from the Indians to build it. This retention of Fort Brewerton and other posts in the Indian country was one of the provoking causes of Pontiac's war, which broke out in 1763, as is attested by the following passage from a letter, written by Sir William Johnson, Nov. 13, 1763, to the English Lords of Trade:

"The grand matter of concern to all the Six Nations, (Mohawks excepted) is the occupying of a chain of small posts on the communication through their country to Lake Ontario, not to mention Fort Stanwix, exclusive of which, there was erected in 1759 Fort Schuyler on the Mohawk river, and the Royal Blockhouse at the east end of Oneida Lake in the country of the Oneidas, Fort Brewerton, and a post at Oswego Falls in the Onondagas country. In order to obtain permission for erecting these posts, they were promised they should be demolished at the end of the war. As about these posts are their fishing and hunting places, where, they complain that they are often obstructed by the troops and insulted, they request that according to promise they may not be kept up, the war with the French being now over."

Parkman, in his history of "The Conspiracy of Pontiac," refers to Fort Brewerton in the following passage, among others:

"In 1763 the British settlements in the province of New York reached no farther than German Flats on the Mohawk. Through the adjacent wilderness ran various lines of military posts to make good the communication from point to point. One of the most important of these passed through the country of the Six Nations and guarded the route between the northern colonies and Lake Ontario. This communication was formed by the Hudson, the Mohawk, Wood Creek, Oneida Lake and the river Oswego. It was defended by Forts Stanwix, Brewerton, Oswego, and two or three smaller posts." (Volume I, 4.)

The fort served a good purpose during the Revolutionary war, since which time it has fallen into neglect.

The conversion of the old fort into a State Reservation will undoubtedly draw renewed interest to the locality and the interesting chapters of our State and National history with which it is interwoven. The surrounding country is beautiful. Oneida Lake is visible from the village. The neighborhood teems with fish and game as in the days when the Onondagas found here their "happy hunting ground" on earth. And there are ample opportunities for house-boating, rowing and sailing.

As soon as the fort is enclosed, trimmed up, and properly marked, it is expected to become a popular object for the historical pilgrim and pleasure seeker. The 100th anniversary of the place was celebrated with military honors Sept. 30, 1859; and it is planned to open the Reservation with an appropriate demonstration next Summer.

It has supplanted discomfort with ease—it has banished the impossible and exaggerated figure produced by the old corset idea. It removes the strain of lacing from the sensitive parts of the body and throws all pressure upon the hips and the strong back muscles, supporting the stomach within the corset and not forcing it below the garment. The Erect Form is made in more models than ever before. There are forty distinct styles of this popular make, each meant for a distinct type of woman. Dealers in all sized towns and cities the land over, sell the Erect Form. Prices range upward from $1.

AN AERIAL ARMADA.

VESSELS WHICH COMPOSE THE AIRSHIP SQUADRON AT ST. LOUIS.

Captain Baldwin's California Arrow and Its Bold Operator—The Meteor, Owned by T. C. Benbow, and Other Craft—The $100,000 Competition.

The maneuvers of the aerial fleet at St. Louis are exciting almost as great interest as the yacht races for the America's cup used to arouse. The experimental flights from the grounds of the world's fair have been successful in the main, and prophecies are freely made that airship racing will ere long take the place of yacht racing and automobile racing as a fad for American millionaires. It is a novel sport and full of excitement, and an airship in full flight makes a beautiful sight. When Thomas S. Baldwin's California Arrow made its second flight from the world's fair aeronautic concourse a few days ago the sun shone brightly, and its rays, striking the whirring propeller of the light and graceful aerial craft, formed an immense halo at its prow. The silken bag containing the gas shone like burnished copper, and the network holding the car glistened like strands of gold. The ship obeyed her rudder perfectly, and at a height of 2,000 feet darted this way and that, up or down, at the will of the operator, finally coming back to the starting point. A. Roy Knabenshue of Toledo, O., the bold and skillful navigator of the Arrow, claims that such sport is really less dangerous than automobiling.

The Arrow is simply an aerial runabout in comparison with the more powerful airships its maker and inventor, Mr. Baldwin, expects to take up one of these days. It represents the outcome of thirty years of study and experiment by Mr. Baldwin and has a cigar shaped gas bag of varnished Japanese silk fifty-two feet long and seventeen feet in diameter, with a capacity of 8,000 cubic feet. The car, forty feet long, is a light framework of white cedar braced with piano wire and in shape resembles a right prism, save that it grows smaller and smaller toward the ends. It is pulled through the air by a two bladed silk propeller eleven feet from tip to tip, set at an angle of twenty degrees at the front end of the car.

The engine weighs only sixty-six pounds, but performs 2,500 revolutions a minute and has a working capacity of seven horsepower. The aeronaut has a seat and conning platform about twelve feet back and can move from one end to the other of the car at will, though much change in position causes the car to ascend or descend by raising or lowering the elevation of the beak. The weight of the whole apparatus is only about 220 pounds.

The Benbow airship, whose dirigibility has also been fully demonstrated since its arrival at St. Louis, is much larger than the Arrow and constructed on an entirely different pattern. Its inventor, T. C. Benbow of Montana, gave it the name of the Meteor. Its cigar shaped bag is seventy-four feet long and twenty-one feet in diameter. It has a capacity of 14,000 cubic feet and carries a weight of 900 pounds.

The car is of aluminium and wood and is divided into two compartments, the forward one containing a ten horsepower gasoline engine. The rear compartment contains the wicker basket in which the operator stands. The propelling apparatus consists of two wheels, twelve feet in diameter, one on each side of the car. They make eighty revolutions a minute, and each wheel is composed of six foot blades or wings which are collapsible and close up at each revolution, remaining open just long enough to seize and hold the air and presenting a minimum of resistance while returning to the point of greatest efficiency. Mr. Benbow has been twelve years working out his ideas.

The aerial flights by these and other airships preliminary to the races for the grand prize of $100,000 have been for the purpose of qualifying in the competition for that prize. All owners of airships expecting to compete must qualify before Nov. 15. The grand prize is to be awarded that competitor whose average speed during his three fastest trips around the course shall be greatest. Among probable competitors besides the Arrow and the Meteor are the dirigible balloons of M. Hippolyte Francois of Paris, A. L. Reynolds of Los Angeles, Cal., and J. Berry of St. Louis.

SENOR LUIS F. COREA.

The Nicaraguan Minister and His Difficulties as a Bridegroom.

Senor Luis F. Corea, Nicaraguan minister to the United States, is one of the most popular of the younger members of the diplomatic corps at Washington. He has been preparing his handsome home on Twentieth street, in that city, for the reception of a bride, his fiancee being Mrs. Ilah Dunlop Jordan, a rich and attractive widow of Macon, Ga. The wedding was to have occurred early in the present month, but has been postponed for a short time in order to give Mrs. Jordan and her relatives an opportunity to investigate charges brought against her intended husband by anonymous correspondents, whose object in making the charges is believed to be blackmail. Mrs. Jordan expresses the utmost confidence in the character of Senor Corea, and it was at his own request that the ceremony was postponed to allow an inquiry to be made.

The anonymous letters, which were sent to Mayor Smith of Macon and to Mrs. Jordan herself, charged that the Nicaraguan minister already had a wife and children and that he was an adventurer and did not pay his debts. Senor Corea is confident of being able to establish his standing in Nicaragua and is searching for the person or persons responsible for the annoyance caused him. President Zelaya of Nicaragua expressed his esteem for the minister to this country in requesting Senor Calyo, minister from Costa Rica, to represent him at Senor Corea's wedding. The Nicaraguan minister has been at Washington for eight years, and his standing in the diplomatic corps is of the highest. He has proved a most acceptable emissary to the government of the United States, both because of his personality and of his thorough acquaintance with the affairs of this country and his own.

EVIL SPIRIT OF WAR.

Odd Form Taken by Smoke and Debris of Russian Mine.

Thus far during the Russo-Japanese hostilities the mine, like the torpedo, has more than borne out its reputation as a death dealing instrument of war. On the sea the Russian battleship Petropavlovsk and the Japanese battleship Hatsuse were sent to the bottom by submarine mines, and on land mines have caused great loss to the Japanese besieging Port Arthur. At the battle of Nanshan Hill, in which Lieutenant General Prince Fushimi so signally distinguished himself, the Russians planned to explode mines in the path of the charging Japanese troops, but the Japs discovered and cut the wires leading to them and thus rendered them harmless.

If one-half the reports from Port Arthur are to be credited, however, the Russians have been more successful

there. Whole regiments of Japanese have been destroyed by General Stoessel's mines as they advanced to attack the outlying forts, and the pioneers and sappers of the Japanese army have retorted by tunneling under Russian forts and blowing them up. During these operations the Russians have made desperate sorties to hinder the work, and many hand to hand skirmishes have taken place. The accompanying picture was made from a photograph of a Russian mine explosion at Mukden. The black, forbidding cloud that arose assumed the form of a giant with outstretched, threatening arms and to the fanciful mind seemed an impressive personification of the evil spirit of war.

A Wonderful Campaigner.

There is no other man addressing the public today who represents such sustained energy and so splendid and long continued a record of oratory as Hon. Chauncey M. Depew. Here is a public speaker who has been addressing audiences on political questions for nearly a half century. Every speech has bristled with fact, glowed with rhetoric and flashed with humor. A comprehensive mind has expressed the issues of this long series of years with a grace that Grecian oratory never surpassed. And yet today this same eloquent voice is ringing out with its clarion tones as in the days of Fremont and Lincoln and Grant and Garfield and Harrison and McKinley! It is the marvel of the political forum and reveals a personality so vital and so virile that it deserves the congratulatory plaudits of the public.

As an illustration of the capacity of this great American orator to endure the strenuous fatigue of campaign labor the following illustration may be cited from the first McKinley campaign: Bryan had been stumping [illegible] for himself and had spoken in one day at seventeen different places. This was a record which in its vigor, apart from what the orator said, made an impression upon those who were listening to him. It was felt that some man of equal staying power was needed to offset the effect of Bryan's celerity and persistency. Mr. McKinley telegraphed to Chauncey M. Depew, explained the circumstances and asked him to give a day to Ohio. Mr. Depew hastened thither in his special car and on one day spoke at exactly the same seventeen places where Bryan had delivered addresses, and within a week after the Nebraska candidate had been heard. Mr. Depew, twenty-five years Mr. Bryan's senior, equaled the record of "the boy orator," and his seventeen addresses aggregated more than five hours in length. At the end of the day Mr. Depew found himself and his car in Cincinnati. There was a mass meeting in progress in that city, and the chairman of the Republican state committee went to Mr. Depew and told him that Cincinnati must have a speech from the distinguished orator who was journeying through that city. Mr. Depew, just coming from the strain of seventeen addresses in one day, consented, went to the opera house where the meeting was held and delivered an address continuing for two hours.

JUDGE STOWELL'S VICTORY.

Judge Merrick Stowell's re-election to the county judgeship has given his many friends in this city and county infinite satisfaction. During the campaign there was a magnificent display of nerve by his political enemies, especially by the coterie who proclaimed an anxiety to "purify the judiciary and restore the county court to its former prestige," endeavoring by malicious and untrue statements and every underhand and contemptible means, even to low personal abuse, to injure his candidacy with the electors. The intrigue with the State Democratic Committee, which furnished the lubricant for the "purity" campaign, was abortive, and met the fate it richly deserved. Although the contest was waged with intense bitterness, Judge Stowell's reputation has not suffered, the hundreds of Republicans who rallied to his support with the many friends who stubbornly contested every inch of ground, evidenced the esteem and veneration with which he is held by the active and loyal Republicans of the county.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The TIMES desires to say a word of commendation for the Board of Public Works, whose term of office has expired. There has been considerable fault found with them, as there undoubtedly will be with their successors, but Mayor Brooker will find it difficult to replace them with men of equal ability. They are successful business men, from president to superintendent, and they have made serious sacrifices in the interest of the city. During their tenure of office there has been built 5½ miles of cement sidewalk, one-third of which is credited to the west side, and the remainder to the east side; $1,000 has been spent in permanent crosswalks, and there is a balance of $20,000 to the credit of the water department, although $3,000 of the earnings of this department have been spent for sidewalk improvement. The elimination of the Storer lighting contract and the substitution therefor of a more equitable one at a reasonable price for all-night service, has saved the taxpayers thousands of dollars. In view of all that has transpired we believe that our citizens and taxpayers have reason to heartily commend the retiring Board and it is hoped that Mayor Brooker will be fortunate enough to secure as competent officials.

FORT BREWERTON

Hon. T. D. Lewis Secures Preservation of Historic Site By Special Legislation—Interesting History.

larger and stronger than any of the others.

"Now, children, when these forts are all finished and the English have brought their scheme to proper ripeness they intend to throw off the mask, and by the security of this line of forts to fall on Five Nations suddenly from every one of them and extirpate your whole confederacy. This scheme I know to be intended and that your utter destruction is projected. Be therefore on your guard and in order that you may be armed against this destructive design I here present you with a hatchet (meaning a Belt of Wampum with ye figure of hatchet work on it) for you to use against the English and thereby prevent the destruction which they are meditating against you."

The chief, however, gave the hatchet belt to Sir William Johnson and affirmed his friendship for the English; so the building of Fort Brewerton and its sister fortifications proceeded.

Fort Brewerton was built by detachments from Oswego and Fort Stanwix under the direction of Captain Brewerton, whose name it bears. It was an eight-sided, or rather, an eight pointed fortification with sixteen faces, judging from the present ground plan. Walking on the parapet to-day, each face measures about 30 feet from the tip of the salient angle to the corresponding re-entrant angle, making a tour of the parapet measure about 480 feet. From the tip of one salient angle to the tip of the next it is about 50 feet, so that the periphery of the octogon would be about 400 feet. The breastwork was originally about 4 feet high, and was surmounted by palisades of sharpened posts, 20 feet high, pierced with loopholes. As the fort field has never been ploughed or cultivated, this breastwork is still distinctly traceable, in places being two feet high. About two years ago, the last owner of the property, Eben G. Gale, planted maple trees upon the eight salient angles of the fort, and these serve as convenient markers to indicate the outline of the fort in the existing pictures.

Outside of the palisaded fort was a moat which is now some four feet deep on the western side. Still farther out was a second and lower breastwork, of which no traces now remain. About 30 rods east of the fort was a magazine connected with the Fort by a tunnel. Another tunnel ran from the Fort to the river. In the middle of the Fort was a well. The work stood on an elevation about twenty feet above the level of the river with ground sloping gradually toward the waters edge.

About half a mile to the eastward, at the mouth of the lake, a rough wall of large rocks was built from the shore of the lake southeastward into the water for a considerable distance and at the outer end was a sentry box. Here a sentinel kept regular watch of the lake and river.

During the remainder of the French and Indian war, Fort Brewerton was an important station as a shelter for troops passing between the Hudson and Lake Ontario, as a depot of military supplies, and as a protection for the frontier. The struggle between the English and French for the possession of this route was of a most desperate and critical character, and every post which defended it was of great value. It may be claimed with justice that Fort Brewerton, though not so elaborate a work as Fort Stanwix on the one side or the Oswego forts on the other side, was an important factor in preventing the successful invasion of the French, and while Fort Stanwix and many other fortifications in the chain have become obliterated, the remains will attest, for many years yet to come, the part which she and her sisters played in the epoch marking days of the eighteenth century.

At the close of the French and Indian war, the fort was not demolished as the English had promised when they secured permission from the Indians to build it. This retention of Fort Brewerton and other posts in the Indian country was one of the provoking causes of Pontiac's war, which broke out in 1763, as is attested by the following passage from a letter, written by Sir William Johnson, Nov. 13, 1763, to the English Lords of Trade:

"The grand matter of concern to all the six Nations, (Mohawks excepted) is the occupying of a chain of small posts on the communication through their country to Lake Ontario, not to mention Fort Stanwix, exclusive of which, there was erected in 1759 Fort Schuyler on the Mohawk river, and the Royal Blockhouse at the east end of Oneida Lake in the country of the Oneidas, Fort Brewerton, and a post at Oswego Falls in the Onondagas country. In order to obtain permission for erecting these posts, they were promised they should be demolished at the end of the war. As about these posts are their fishing and hunting places, where, they complain that they are often obstructed by the troops and insulted, they request that according to promise they may not be kept up, the war with the French being now over."

Parkman, in his history of "The Conspiracy of Pontiac," refers to Fort Brewerton in the following passage, among others:

"In 1763 the British settlements in the province of New York reached no farther than German Flats on the Mohawk. Through the adjacent wilderness ran various lines of military posts to make good the communication from point to point. One of the most important of these passed through the country of the Six Nations and guarded the route between the northern colonies and Lake Ontario. This communication was formed by the Hudson, the Mohawk, Wood Creek, Oneida Lake and the river Oswego. It was defended by Forts Stanwix, Brewerton, Oswego, and two or three smaller posts." (Volume I, 4.)

The fort served a good purpose during the Revolutionary war, since which time it has fallen into neglect.

The conversion of the old fort into a State Reservation will undoubtedly draw renewed interest to the locality and the interesting chapters of our State and National history with which it is interwoven. The surrounding country is beautiful. Oneida Lake is visible from the village. The neighborhood teems with fish and game as in the days when the Onondagas found here their "happy hunting ground" on earth. And there are ample opportunities for house-boating, rowing and sailing.

As soon as the fort is enclosed, trimmed up, and properly marked, it is expected to become a popular object for the historical pilgrim and pleasure seeker. The 100th anniversary of the place was celebrated with military honors Sept. 30, 1859; and it is planned to open the Reservation with an appropriate demonstration next Summer.

EDWARD HAGAMAN HALL.

THIS is the day of the natural waisted woman. The W. B. Erect Form has changed the American figure. It has supplanted discomfort with ease—it has banished the impossible and exaggerated figure produced by the old corset idea. It removes the strain of lacing from the sensitive parts of the body and throws all pressure upon the hips and the strong back muscles, supporting the stomach within the corset and not forcing it below the garment. The Erect Form is made in more models than ever before. There are forty distinct styles of this popular make, each meant for a distinct type of woman. Dealers in all sized towns and cities the land over, sell the Erect Form. Prices range upward from $1.

AN AERIAL ARMADA.

VESSELS WHICH COMPOSE THE AIRSHIP SQUADRON AT ST. LOUIS.

Captain Baldwin's California Arrow and Its Bold Operator—The Meteor, Owned by T. C. Benbow, and Other Craft—The $100,000 Competition.

The maneuvers of the aerial fleet at St. Louis are exciting almost as great interest as the yacht races for the America's cup used to arouse. The experimental flights from the grounds of the world's fair have been successful in the main, and prophecies are freely made that airship racing will ere long take the place of yacht racing and automobile racing as a fad for American millionaires. It is a novel sport and full of excitement, and an airship in full flight makes a beautiful sight. When Thomas S. Baldwin's California Arrow made its second flight from the world's fair aeronautic concourse a few days ago the sun shone brightly, and its rays, striking the whirring propeller of the light and graceful aerial craft, formed an immense halo at its prow. The silken bag containing the gas shone like burnished copper, and the network holding the car glistened like strands of gold. The ship obeyed her rudder perfectly, and at a height of 2,000 feet darted this way and that, up or down, at the will of the operator, finally coming back to the starting point. A. Roy Knabenshue of Toledo, O., the bold and skillful navigator of the Arrow, claims that such sport is really less dangerous than automobiling.

The Arrow is simply an aerial runabout in comparison with the more powerful airships its maker and inventor, Mr. Baldwin, expects to take up one of these days. It represents the outcome of thirty years of study and experiment by Mr. Baldwin and has a cigar shaped gas bag of varnished Japanese silk fifty-two feet long and seventeen feet in diameter, with a capacity of 8,000 cubic feet. The car, forty feet long, is a light framework of white cedar braced with piano wire and in shape resembles a right prism, save that it grows smaller and smaller toward the ends. It is pulled through the air by a two bladed silk propeller eleven feet from tip to tip, set at an angle of twenty degrees at the front end of the car.

The engine weighs only sixty-six pounds, but performs 2,500 revolutions a minute and has a working capacity of seven horsepower. The aeronaut has a seat and conning platform about twelve feet back and can move from one end to the other of the car at will, though much change in position causes the car to ascend or descend by raising or lowering the elevation of the beak. The weight of the whole apparatus is only about 220 pounds.

The Benbow airship, whose dirigibility has also been fully demonstrated since its arrival at St. Louis, is much larger than the Arrow and constructed on an entirely different pattern. Its inventor, T. C. Benbow of Montana, gave it the name of the Meteor. Its cigar shaped bag is seventy-four feet long and twenty-one feet in diameter. It has a capacity of 14,000 cubic feet and carries a weight of 900 pounds.

The car is of aluminium and wood and is divided into two compartments, the forward one containing a ten horsepower gasoline engine. The rear compartment contains the wicker basket in which the operator stands. The propelling apparatus consists of two wheels, twelve feet in diameter, one on each side of the car. They make eighty revolutions a minute, and each wheel is composed of six foot blades or wings which are collapsible and close up at each revolution, remaining open just long enough to seize and hold the air and presenting a minimum of resistance while returning to the point of greatest efficiency. Mr. Benbow has been twelve years working out his ideas.

The aerial flights by these and other airships preliminary to the races for the grand prize of $100,000 have been for the purpose of qualifying in the competition for that prize. All owners of airships expecting to compete must qualify before Nov. 15. The grand prize is to be awarded that competitor whose average speed during his three fastest trips around the course shall be greatest. Among probable competitors besides the Arrow and the Meteor are the dirigible balloons of M. Hippolyte Francois of Paris, A. L. Reynolds of Los Angeles, Cal., and J. Berry of St. Louis.

SENOR LUIS F. COREA.

The Nicaraguan Minister and His Difficulties as a Bridegroom.

Senor Luis F. Corea, Nicaraguan minister to the United States, is one of the most popular of the younger members of the diplomatic corps at Washington. He has been preparing his handsome home on Twentieth street, in that city, for the reception of a bride, his fiancee being Mrs. Ilah Dunlop Jordan, a rich and attractive widow of Macon, Ga. The wedding was to have occurred early in the present month, but has been postponed for a short time in order to give Mrs. Jordan and her relatives an opportunity to investigate charges brought against her intended husband by anonymous correspondents, whose object in making the charges is believed to be blackmail. Mrs. Jordan expresses the utmost confidence in the character of Senor Corea, and it was at his own request that the ceremony was postponed to allow an inquiry to be made.

The anonymous letters, which were sent to Mayor Smith of Macon and to Mrs. Jordan herself, charged that the Nicaraguan minister already had a wife and children and that he was an adventurer and did not pay his debts. Senor Corea is confident of being able to establish his standing in Nicaragua and is searching for the person or persons responsible for the annoyance caused him. President Zelaya of Nicaragua expressed his esteem for the minister to this country in requesting Senor Calvo, minister from Costa Rica, to represent him at Senor Corea's wedding. The Nicaraguan minister has been at Washington for eight years, and his standing in the diplomatic corps is of the highest. He has proved a most acceptable emissary to the government of the United States, both because of his personality and of his thorough acquaintance with the affairs of this country and his own.

EVIL SPIRIT OF WAR.

Odd Form Taken by Smoke and Debris of Russian Mine.

Thus far during the Russo-Japanese hostilities the mine, like the torpedo, has more than borne out its reputation as a death dealing instrument of war. On the sea the Russian battleship Petropavlovsk and the Japanese battleship Hatsuse were sent to the bottom by submarine mines, and on land mines have caused great loss to the Japanese besieging Port Arthur. At the battle of Nanshan Hill, in which Lieutenant General Prince Fushimi so signally distinguished himself, the Russians planned to explode mines in the path of the charging Japanese troops, but the Japs discovered and cut the wires leading to them and thus rendered them harmless.

If one-half the reports from Port Arthur are to be credited, however, the Russians have been more successful

there. Whole regiments of Japanese have been destroyed by General Stoessel's mines as they advanced to attack the outlying forts, and the pioneers and sappers of the Japanese army have retorted by tunneling under Russian forts and blowing them up. During these operations the Russians have made desperate sorties to hinder the work, and many hand to hand skirmishes have taken place. The accompanying picture was made from a photograph of a Russian mine explosion at Mukden. The black, forbidding cloud that arose assumed the form of a giant with outstretched, threatening arms and to the fanciful mind seemed an impressive personification of the evil spirit of war.

A Wonderful Campaigner.

There is no other man addressing the public today who represents such sustained energy and so splendid and long continued a record of oratory as Hon. Chauncey M. Depew. Here is a public speaker who has been addressing audiences on political questions for nearly a half century. Every speech has bristled with fact, glowed with rhetoric and flashed with humor. A comprehensive mind has expressed the issues of this long series of years with a grace that Grecian oratory never surpassed. And yet today this same eloquent voice is ringing out with the clarion tones as in the days of Fremont and Lincoln and Grant and Garfield and Harrison and McKinley! It is the marvel of the political forum and reveals a personality so vital and so virile that it deserves the congratulatory plaudits of the public.

As an illustration of the capacity of this great American orator to endure the strenuous fatigue of campaign labor the following illustration may be cited from the first McKinley campaign: Bryan had been stumping Ohio for himself and had spoken in one day at seventeen different places. This was a record which in its vigor, apart from what the orator said, made an impression upon those who were listening to him. It was felt that some man of equal staying power was needed to offset the effect of Bryan's celerity and persistency. Mr. McKinley telegraphed to Chauncey M. Depew, explained the circumstances and asked him to give a day to Ohio. Mr. Depew hastened thither in his special car and on one day spoke at exactly the same seventeen places where Bryan had delivered addresses, and within a week after the Nebraska candidate had been heard. Mr. Depew, twenty-five years Mr. Bryan's senior, equaled the record of "the boy orator," and his seventeen addresses aggregated more than five hours in length. At the end of the day Mr. Depew found himself and his car in Cincinnati. There was a mass meeting in progress in that city, and the chairman of the Republican state committee went to Mr. Depew and told him that Cincinnati must have a speech from the distinguished orator who was journeying through that city. Mr. Depew, just coming from the strain of seventeen addresses in one day, consented, went to the opera house where the meeting was held and delivered an address continuing for two hours.

NO CITY APPOINTMENTS MADE.

Mayor Brooker informed The Times at noon that he had not yet made any city appointments, nor could he do so today. Despite the many and perplexing rumors that have been in circulation, the several offices are yet unfilled.

JUDGE STOWELL'S VICTORY.

Judge Merrick Stowell's re-election to the county judgeship has given his many friends in this city and county infinite satisfaction. During the campaign there was a magnificent display of nerve by his political enemies, especially by the coterie who proclaimed an anxiety to "purify the judiciary and restore the county court to its former prestige," endeavoring by malicious and untrue statements and every underhand and contemptible means, even to low personal abuse, to injure his candidacy with the electors. The intrigue with the State Democratic Committee, which furnished the lubricant for the "purity" campaign, was abortive, and met the fate it richly deserved. Although the contest was waged with intense bitterness, Judge Stowell's reputation has not suffered, the hundreds of Republicans who rallied to his support with the many friends who stubbornly contested every inch of ground, evidenced the esteem and veneration with which he is held by the active and loyal Republicans of the county.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The TIMES desires to say a word of commendation for the Board of Public Works, whose term of office has expired. There has been considerable fault found with them, as there undoubtedly will be with their successors, but Mayor Brooker will find it difficult to replace them with men of equal ability. They are successful business men, from president to superintendent, and they have made serious sacrifices in the interest of the city. During their tenure of office there has been built 5½ miles of cement sidewalk, one-third of which is credited to the west side, and the remainder to the east side; $1,000 has been spent in permanent crosswalks, and there is a balance of $20,000 to the credit of the water department, although $3,000 of the earnings of this department have been spent for sidewalk improvement. The elimination of the Storer lighting contract and the substitution therefor of a more equitable one at a reasonable price for all-night service, has saved the taxpayers thousands of dollars. In view of all that has transpired we believe that our citizens and taxpayers have reason to heartily commend the retiring Board and it is hoped that Mayor Brooker will be fortunate enough to secure as competent officials.

Good Stories Told About Famous Folk

JOSEPH JEFFERSON, who recently retired from the stage, once told a friend that during his long career he had never been associated with any one showing undue familiarity with him save one individual, a man named Bagley, who some years ago was property man in the comedian's company, says Harper's Weekly.

This Bagley annoyed Mr. Jefferson very much by his somewhat offensive manners, but, owing to the valuable services rendered by him, Mr. Jefferson had always been loath to take measures more severe than a reprimand. But finally the familiarity of the property man increased to an extent impossible to endure, so he was summarily discharged. This dismissal occurred just before the opening of Mr. Jefferson's engagement one year in Baltimore.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

That night Bagley got exceedingly drunk. Paying his way into the theater, he repaired to the gallery, there to see his old employer enact Rip Van Winkle.

The angry Gretchen had just driven poor, destitute Rip from the cottage, when Rip turned and, with a word of pathos, asked, "Den I haf no interest in der house?" The theater was deathly still, the audience half in tears, when Bagley's cracked voice was heard in response:

"Only 80 per cent, Joe, old boy; only 80 per cent."

Will N. Harben found such an interesting character in a humble Russian tailor on one of the side streets in New York that he often dropped into the man's shop and talked with him. The acquaintance had gone on for several weeks before the tailor was told by a customer, who had seen Mr. Harben going out, that the visitor was a novelist. The Russian refused to believe it, and to prove his statement true the customer showed him a copy of a fashion magazine in which was an advertisement of Mr. Harben's new novel, "The Georgians." The advertisement contained a good portrait of the author, and the tailor was convinced. A few days later Mr. Harben came into the fellow's shop and was greeted with a most cordial smile.

WILL N. HARBEN.

"I have jhust found you oudt," said the tailor. "I have your book bought, an' when I have more dose English studied I will him read."

Thereupon he went to a drawer and got out a copy of the fashion magazine and began to turn the pages.

"To tell you de trude, Mr. Harben," he went on, "I no understand your book at all. Now"—he was holding the magazine open at a double page fashion plate—"will you please tell me what you got all dese womens in here for?"

President William Rainey Harper of Chicago university is head of an institution numbering some 3,000 students. His passion is the study of the Semitic languages and literature, but to maintain good order among the young men under his jurisdiction he has to give attention oftentimes to problems that apparently have very little to do with scholastic research. He has recently been studying how to keep the students away from what are known as the "bad lands" of the Lake avenue district. That is the only district in the part of Chicago where the university is located in which liquor is sold. As is well known, John D. Rockefeller takes a great interest in Chicago university and he is a total abstinence advocate. It was reported some time ago that he had advanced money for the purchase of all the land in the vicinity occupied by saloons, but the breweries, getting wind of the plan, are said to have put up the prices on property they controlled to a prohibitive point. Dr. Harper is now making the experiment of an all night restaurant on the college campus, where students can get late suppers when priming up for examinations and have no excuse for straying into doubtful territory.

PRESIDENT HARPER.

Dr. Harper has met with wonderful success in building up the university, of which he has had charge since 1891. John D. Rockefeller has made the institution so many large donations that it is now one of the richest universities in the world. President Harper is not only an able executive, but a famous scholar. When he was only thirty years of age Yale conferred on him the signal honor of inviting him to its chair of Semitic languages and literature, and he was only five years older when he became president of the University of Chicago.

Israel Zangwill, the author and playwright who is in America to arouse interest in the scheme to colonize the Jews on land the British government has offered to set aside for them in British East Africa, is one of the wittiest men of his race as well as one of the most brainy and thoughtful.

"I. Zangwill, I. Zangwill," a lady repeated one day. "By the way, what is your Christian name?" "Madam," the author replied, with a smile, "I have no Christian name!" When asked about the African colonization plan Mr. Zangwill said: "The problem does not relate to the American Jews, but to the 6,000,000 in Russia. The Russian government has consented to allow the Jews to leave, which is a concession, although not much of a one. In Russia there are still occasional outbreaks and the anti-Semitic feeling grows.

ISRAEL ZANGWILL.

"As regards America, I cannot say whether there is any anti-Semitic feeling discernible, but there is a danger of it if too many Jews come over. We must stem this tide of immigration, for if we do not the anti-Semitic feeling is bound to come."

Mr. Zangwill was asked if many Jews were fighting in the Russian armies in the far east.

"Yes," he replied, "there are thousands of them. They make good soldiers, and a great many are there willingly, having been caught by the patriotic wave that swept over the Russian empire."

Bishop Henry White Warren of the Methodist church, who returned recently from a trip to the Philippines and visited President Roosevelt to report to him his impressions of conditions there, has traveled much in the interest of the missionary work of his denomination in the orient. He is regarded as one of the most eloquent preachers of the Methodist church. Bishop Warren's marriage in 1884 to Mrs. Iliff of Denver was an event of note. She was called the "cattle queen of the plains." As a girl of twenty she worked in Chicago as an instructor in the operation of sewing machines, in this way earning support for her widowed mother and younger brothers and sisters. She went to Denver to take charge of a sewing machine agency there. Ere long she married the cattle king I. W. Iliff. A few years afterward he died, leaving her a fortune of about $5,000,000. She continued the business of the big cattle owner, and it is said had increased the fortune he left to about $10,000,000 at the time she married Bishop Warren.

BISHOP H. W. WARREN.

Congressman John Sharp Williams, leader of the Democratic minority in the house of representatives, says he is trying to overcome the fatal habit of humor, realizing that it is a handicap to one who seeks to be regarded as a serious minded statesman.

"Henry Watterson was the first man who aroused me to a full sense of the dangers I was incurring," he says. "It was when I began to get my name in the papers outside of Yazoo City. Watterson warned me very solemnly.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

"'Williams,' he said, 'you may have a career before you, and if you intend to have one you must begin at once to do what I tell you. You must wrap the mantle of dignity about you and never let it fall off again. Be solemn. Never say anything humorous, never spring a joke, never tell a funny story.'

"Here he stopped, looked at me searchingly and concluded impressively:

"'But if you must do it, Williams, do it with a slight nasal twang, so that you may be suspected of New England ancestry.'"

Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief of the government bureau of chemistry, who says that 85 per cent of all whisky sold in America is grossly adulterated, strongly urges the passage of a pure food bill. He has given a great deal of study to the subject of adulteration of foods and has proved by actual experiment many of the statements he has made regarding the evils of such adulteration. He holds that the statutes should compel spurious articles to be labeled as such. It was Dr. Wiley who conducted the famous "government boarding house," where employees of the government departments were boarded at the expense of the government and fed on adulterated foods for the purpose of determining the effect of such foods on the various parts of the human system. The experiments on the "poison boarders" proved the truth of Dr. Wiley's theories. The head of the bureau of chemistry is something of a humorist, and on one occasion when he appeared before the agricultural committee of the house of representatives he was asked the question, "What is a scientific agriculturist?"

DR. H. W. WILEY.

"A scientific agriculturist," replied the professor, "is a gentleman in the employ of the government who can make $2 grow on an appropriation bill where only $1 grew before."

WAR CLUB VS. HOE.

INDIAN BRAVES ARE TAUGHT AT CARLISLE TO BE GOOD FARMERS.

They Learn to Use the Saw and the Plane, the Spade and the Pitchfork Rather Than the Tomahawk and Spear—Results of Their Training.

The Indian warriors of Carlisle, Pa., have won renown on the football oval. Their rush line has often carried husky palefaces before it amid war whoops which recalled the days when a victory for the red man meant a scarcity of scalps among the whites. The Carlisle warriors fight on the gridiron with the same courage the Indians of bygone days showed when they took the warpath against their enemies, but no tomahawks are used now and no scalps are taken.

They are not only successful athletes, but they show much energy in the use of the hoe, the ax, the hammer and the plane. In short, the Indians at Carlisle are not only receiving a good education from books, but are learning to be industrious and intelligent farmers, carpenters, blacksmiths, tailors and mechanics. The records kept of the graduates of the school show that despite an occasional failure to profit by the instruction received most of those who have had a training at Carlisle continue self supporting and do credit to the institution as wage earners. With the young women the results are equally encouraging. Besides the education in reading, writing and arithmetic and other elementary branches which the girls at Carlisle receive, they are trained in cooking and other housework, and the aim of the institution is to make good seamstresses, good cooks and good housekeepers of the girls and good farmers and mechanics of the boys.

Carlisle has over a thousand students, and it has trained over 5,000 young red men and women since its establishment in 1879. The school took its origin from the efforts of Colonel Richard H. Pratt, an officer who had been an Indian fighter on the plains of the west, to give Indians who had been imprisoned for resisting the government an opportunity to support themselves and obtain education on their release. The result was the establishment of an industrial school to give Indian boys and girls the kind of training that will make them capable of self support and of exercising the duties of citizenship.

The so called "outing" system has been found most beneficial in making the young Indians feel that they are just like other Americans, enjoying the same liberties and opportunities and bearing the same responsibilities. By this system the pupils are placed out in families while still connected with the school, the boys working in the field and in the shop and the girls in the dairy and the household. Every summer about 800 or 900 pupils are sent out to live and labor in this way. The farmers and others with whom they are placed generally report good results from the association. The work of the Indian boys is apt to refute the popular notion that all Indians are lazy and good for nothing. Sometimes amusing experiences are reported. A small Dakota boy who had been sent to work for a farmer in Pennsylvania took a big tin pail and started to milk a cow.

"Are you sure you can milk?" he was asked.

"Yas, perfect sure." he said.

"Oh, I guess you can draw the milk out, but on which side of the cow are you going to sit?"

The aborigine responded with rigid gravity of countenance, "I sit on the outside."

Although the Indian boy has a great love of the open fields and free air, he has a fondness for two accomplishments that sometimes cause him to choose the counting room rather than the farm. As some among his ancestors were fond of writing strange symbols on birch bark and carving rude inscriptions in stone, so today many Indian youths have special aptitude for drawing and penmanship and other accomplishments that exercise the imitative faculty. They are extremely patriotic. The Indian of old time loved and fought for his tribal totem. The red boys and girls of today are being taught at Carlisle to love the stars and stripes.

The Missouri Is a Dusty River.

"The dust blows out of the Missouri river," asserted Bob Burdette. "It is the only river in the world where the dust blows in one great column out of the river bed. The catfish come up to the surface to sneeze. The Missouri river is composed of six parts sand and mud and four parts water. The natural color of the water is seal brown, but when it rains for two or three days and the river gets pretty wet it changes to a dark iron gray. A long rain will make this river so thin that it can easily be poured from one vessel to another like a cocktail. When it is ordinarily dry, however, it has to be stirred with a stick before you can pour it out of anything."—Kansas City Journal.

The Hornet's Sting.

The female hornet has a rapid fire armament with a recoverable projectile. It uses it for both attack and defense and with remarkable aim and efficiency. The first stroke of a hornet is as penetrating as an electric shock. At the base of its sharp sting there is a sac containing poison which, when injected into the substance of its enemy, causes pain, swelling and discomfort, facts to which most persons are able to testify by experience. Should the injection be upon the end of the thumb or nose or upon the tongue there is danger from it. Strong ammonia applied to the wound is the best antidote.

And the Lawyer Smiled.

"Well," said the young lawyer, after he had heard his new client's story, "your claim appears to be good. I think we can secure a verdict without much trouble."

"That's what I told my wife, and yet she insisted at first that we ought to engage a first class lawyer."—London Telegraph.

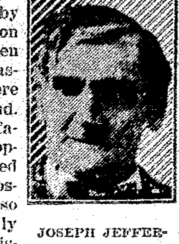
Good Stories Told About Famous Folk

JOSEPH JEFFERSON, who recently retired from the stage, once told a friend that during his long career he had never been associated with any one showing undue familiarity with him save one individual, a man named Bagley, who some years ago was property man in the comedian's company, says Harper's Weekly.



JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

This Bagley annoyed Mr. Jefferson very much by his somewhat offensive manners, but, owing to the valuable services rendered by him, Mr. Jefferson had always been loath to take measures more severe than a reprimand. But finally the familiarity of the property man increased to an extent impossible to endure, so he was summarily discharged. This dismissal occurred just before the opening of Mr. Jefferson's engagement one year in Baltimore.

That night Bagley got exceedingly drunk. Paying his way into the theater, he repaired to the gallery, there to see his old employer enact Rip Van Winkle.

The angry Gretchen had just driven poor, destitute Rip from the cottage, when Rip turned and, with a word of pathos, asked, "Den I haf no interest in der house?" The theater was deathly still, the audience half in tears, when Bagley's cracked voice was heard in response:

"Only 80 per cent, Joe, old boy; only 80 per cent."

Will N. Harben found such an interesting character in a humble Russian tailor on one of the side streets in New York that he often dropped into the man's shop and talked with him. The acquaintance had gone on for several weeks before the tailor was told by a customer, who had seen Mr. Harben going out, that the visitor was a novelist. The Russian refused to believe it, and to prove his statement true the customer showed him a copy of a fashion magazine in which was an advertisement of Mr. Harben's new novel, "The Georgians."

WILL N. HARBEN.

The advertisement contained a good portrait of the author, and the tailor was convinced. A few days later Mr. Harben came into the fellow's shop and was greeted with a most cordial smile.

"I have jhust found you oudt," said the tailor. "I have your book bought, an' when I have more dose English studied I will him read."

Thereupon he went to a drawer and got out a copy of the fashion magazine and began to turn the pages.

"To tell you de trude, Mr. Harben," he went on, "I no understand your book at all. Now"—he was holding the magazine open at a double page fashion plate—"will you please tell me what you got all dese womens in here for?"

President William Rainey Harper of Chicago university is head of an institution numbering some 3,000 students. His passion is the study of the Semitic languages and literature, but to maintain good order among the young men under his jurisdiction he has to give attention oftentimes to problems that apparently have very little to do with scholastic research. He has recently been studying how to keep the students away from what are known as the "bad lands" of the Lake avenue district. That is the only district in the part of Chicago where the university is located in which liquor is sold. As is well known, John D. Rockefeller takes a great interest in Chicago university and he is a total abstinence advocate. It was reported some time ago that he had advanced money for the purchase of all the land in the vicinity occupied by saloons, but the breweries, getting wind of the plan, are said to have put up the prices on property they controlled to a prohibitive point. Dr. Harper is now making the experiment of an all night restaurant on the college campus, where students can get late suppers when priming up for examinations and have no excuse for straying into doubtful territory.

PRESIDENT HARPER.

Dr. Harper has met with wonderful success in building up the university, of which he has had charge since 1891. John D. Rockefeller has made the institution so many large donations that it is now one of the richest universities in the world. President Harper is not only an able executive, but a famous scholar. When he was only thirty years of age Yale conferred on him the signal honor of inviting him to its chair of Semitic languages and literature, and he was only five years older when he became president of the University of Chicago.

Israel Zangwill, the author and playwright who is in America to arouse interest in the scheme to colonize the Jews on land the British government has offered to set aside for them in British East Africa, is one of the wittiest men of his race as well as one of the most brainy and thoughtful.

"I. Zangwill, I. Zangwill," a lady repeated one day. "By the way, what is your Christian name?" "Madam," the author replied, with a smile, "I have no Christian name!" When asked about the African colonization plan Mr. Zangwill said: "The problem does not relate to the American Jews, but to the 6,000,000 in Russia. The Russian government has consented to allow the Jews to leave, which is a concession, although not much of a one. In Russia there are still occasional outbreaks and the anti-Semitic feeling grows.

ISRAEL ZANGWILL.

"As regards America, I cannot say whether there is any anti-Semitic feeling discernible, but there is a danger of it if too many Jews come over. We must stem this tide of immigration, for if we do not the anti-Semitic feeling is bound to come."

Mr. Zangwill was asked if many Jews were fighting in the Russian armies in the far east.

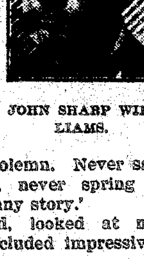
"Yes," he replied, "there are thousands of them. They make good soldiers, and a great many are there willingly, having been caught by the patriotic wave that swept over the Russian empire."

Bishop Henry White Warren of the Methodist church, who returned recently from a trip to the Philippines and visited President Roosevelt to report to him his impressions of conditions there, has traveled much in the interest of the missionary work of his denomination in the orient. He is regarded as one of the most eloquent preachers of the Methodist church. Bishop Warren's marriage in 1884 to Mrs. Iliff of Denver was an event of note. She was called the "cattle queen of the plains." As a girl of twenty she worked in Chicago as an instructor in the operation of sewing machines, in this way earning support for her widowed mother and younger brothers and sisters. She went to Denver to take charge of a sewing machine agency there. Ere long she married the cattle king I. W. Iliff. A few years afterward he died, leaving her a fortune of about $5,000,000. She continued the business of the big cattle owner, and it is said had increased the fortune he left to about $10,000,000 at the time she married Bishop Warren.

BISHOP H. W. WARREN.

Congressman John Sharp Williams, leader of the Democratic minority in the house of representatives, says he is trying to overcome the fatal habit of humor, realizing that it is a handicap to one who seeks to be regarded as a serious minded statesman.

"Henry Watterson was the first man who aroused me to a full sense of the dangers I was incurring," he says. "It was when I began to get my name in the papers outside of Yazoo City. Watterson warned me very solemnly.



JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

"'Williams,' he said, 'you may have a career before you, and if you intend to have one you must begin at once to do what I tell you. You must wrap the mantle of dignity about you and never let it fall off again. Be solemn. Never say anything humorous, never spring a joke, never tell a funny story.'

"Here he stopped, looked at me searchingly and concluded impressively:

"'But if you must do it, Williams, do it with a slight nasal twang, so that you may be suspected of New England ancestry.'"

Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief of the government bureau of chemistry, who says that 85 per cent of all whisky sold in America is grossly adulterated, strongly urges the passage of a pure food bill. He has given a great deal of study to the subject of adulteration of foods and has proved by actual experiment many of the statements he has made regarding the evils of such adulteration. He holds that the statutes should compel spurious articles to be labeled as such. It was Dr. Wiley who conducted the famous "government boarding house," where employees of the government departments were boarded at the expense of the government and fed on adulterated foods for the purpose of determining the effect of such foods on the various parts of the human system. The experiments on the "poison boarders" proved the truth of Dr. Wiley's theories. The head of the bureau of chemistry is something of a humorist, and on one occasion when he appeared before the agricultural committee of the house of representatives he was asked the question, "What is a scientific agriculturist?"

DR. H. W. WILEY.

"A scientific agriculturist," replied the professor, "is a gentleman in the employ of the government who can make $2 grow on an appropriation bill where only $1 grew before."

WAR CLUB VS. HOE.

INDIAN BRAVES ARE TAUGHT AT CARLISLE TO BE GOOD FARMERS.

They Learn to Use the Saw and the Plane, the Spade and the Pitchfork Rather Than the Tomahawk and Spear—Results of Their Training.

The Indian warriors of Carlisle, Pa., have won renown on the football oval. Their rush line has often carried husky palefaces before it amid war whoops which recalled the days when a victory for the red man meant a scarcity of scalps among the whites. The Carlisle warriors fight on the gridiron with the same courage the Indians of bygone days showed when they took the warpath against their enemies, but no tomahawks are used now and no scalps are taken.

They are not only successful athletes, but they show much energy in the use of the hoe, the ax, the hammer and the plane. In short, the Indians at Carlisle are not only receiving a good education from books, but are learning to be industrious and intelligent farmers, carpenters, blacksmiths, tailors and mechanics. The records kept of the graduates of the school show that despite an occasional failure to profit by the instruction received most of those who have had a training at Carlisle continue self supporting and do credit to the institution as wage earners. With the young women the results are equally encouraging. Besides the education in reading, writing and arithmetic and other elementary branches which the girls at Carlisle receive, they are trained in cooking and other housework, and the aim of the institution is to make good seamstresses, good cooks and good housekeepers of the girls and good farmers and mechanics of the boys.

Carlisle has over a thousand students, and it has trained over 5,000 young red men and women since its establishment in 1879. The school took its origin from the efforts of Colonel Richard H. Pratt, an officer who had been an Indian fighter on the plains of the west, to give Indians who had been imprisoned for resisting the government an opportunity to support themselves and obtain education on their release. The result was the establishment of an industrial school to give Indian boys and girls the kind of training that will make them capable of self support and of exercising the duties of citizenship.

CARLISLE INDIAN BOY LEARNING TO BE A TINSMITH.

The so called "outing" system has been found most beneficial in making the young Indians feel that they are just like other Americans, enjoying the same liberties and opportunities and bearing the same responsibilities. By this system the pupils are placed out in families while still connected with the school, the boys working in the field and in the shop and the girls in the dairy and the household. Every summer about 800 or 900 pupils are sent out to live and labor in this way. The farmers and others with whom they are placed generally report good results from the association. The work of the Indian boys is apt to refute the popular notion that all Indians are lazy and good for nothing. Sometimes amusing experiences are reported. A small Dakota boy who had been sent to work for a farmer in Pennsylvania took a big tin pail and started to milk a cow.

"Are you sure you can milk?" he was asked.

"Yas, perfect sure," he said.

"Oh, I guess you can draw the milk out, but on which side of the cow are you going to sit?"

The aborigine responded with rigid gravity of countenance, "I sit on the outside."

Although the Indian boy has a great love of the open fields and free air, he has a fondness for two accomplishments that sometimes cause him to choose the counting room rather than the farm. As some among his ancestors were fond of writing strange symbols on birch bark and carving rude inscriptions in stone, so today many Indian youths have special aptitude for drawing and penmanship and other accomplishments that exercise the imitative faculty. They are extremely patriotic. The Indian of old time loved and fought for his tribal totem. The red boys and girls of today are being taught at Carlisle to love the stars and stripes.

The Missouri Is a Dusty River.

"The dust blows out of the Missouri river," asserted Bob Burdette. "It is the only river in the world where the dust blows in one great column out of the river bed. The catfish come up to the surface to sneeze. The Missouri river is composed of six parts sand and mud and four parts water. The natural color of the water is seal brown, but when it rains for two or three days and the river gets pretty wet it changes to a dark iron gray. A long rain will make this river so thin that it can easily be poured from one vessel to another like a cocktail. When it is ordinarily dry, however, it has to be stirred with a stick before you can pour it out of anything."—Kansas City Journal.

The Hornet's Sting.

The female hornet has a rapid fire armament with a recoverable projectile. It uses it for both attack and defense and with remarkable aim and efficiency. The first stroke of a hornet is as penetrating as an electric shock. At the base of its sharp sting there is a sac containing poison which, when injected into the substance of its enemy, causes pain, swelling and discomfort, facts to which most persons are able to testify by experience. Should the injection be upon the end of the thumb or nose or upon the tongue there is danger from it. Strong ammonia applied to the wound is the best antidote.

And the Lawyer Smiled.

"Well," said the young lawyer, after he had heard his new client's story, "your claim appears to be good. I think we can secure a verdict without much trouble."

"That's what I told my wife, and yet she insisted at first that we ought to engage a first class lawyer."—London Telegraph.

Daring Racers In the Air.

No other pet or form of sport can compare with racing pigeons, says Country Life In America. The very name seems to cut the air. A bird that can maintain a speed of a mile and a half a minute for 100 miles and that can cover 700 miles between the rising and setting of one sun is a creature to stir the blood and lift the heart. It is gentle, but it endures to the end, and I have seen it come to the home loft ripped across its back by the talons of a hawk.

The homers enjoy the racing. They are as keen to be out and at it as leashed hounds.

Mothers Praise It.

Mothers everywhere praise One Minute Cough Cure for the sufferings it has relieved and the lives of their little ones it has saved. A certain cure for coughs, croup and whooping cough. A. L. Spafford, Postmaster, of Chester, Mich., says: "Our little girl was unconscious from strangulation during a sudden and terrible attack of croup. One Minute Cough Cure relieved and cured her and I cannot praise it too highly." One Minute Cough Cure relieves coughs, makes breathing easy, cuts out phlegm, draws out inflammation and removes every cause of a cough and strain on lungs. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Valuable Queen Bees.

Just as there are valuable strains in horses, cattle and other stock, so there are varieties of queen bees which are worth many hundred times their weight in gold. The most valuable strain is the Italian, and many Italian bee farmers demand and receive without question prices ranging from $50 to $200 for a single queen bee of a certain kind. Such bees are sent all over the world. The owner of a bee farm near Ottawa, Canada, goes to Europe annually and brings back with him bees of an aggregate value of thousands of dollars. He is enabled through the agency of an Italian firm to effect an insurance upon the most valuable of his queens.—Boston Transcript.

The Desecration of Milton's Tomb.

The body of the great poet Milton was once on view at a charge of threepence a head. It was in 1790, after a little carousal, that two overseers and a carpenter entered the Church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, where Milton lay buried, and, having discovered the leaden coffin which contained his body, cut open its top with a mallet and chisel. "When they disturbed the shroud," Neve says, when telling the story of the ghoulish deed, "the ribs fell. Mr. Fountain confessed that he pulled hard at the teeth, which resisted until some one hit them with a stone." Fountain secured all the fine teeth in the upper jaw and generously gave one to one of his accomplices. Altogether the scoundrels stole a rib bone, ten teeth and several handfuls of hair, and to crown the diabolical business the female gravedigger afterward exhibited the body to any one willing to pay threepence for the spectacle.—Westminster Gazette.

The Lobster's Life.

Lobsters haunt rocks, just as rabbits do woods or furze brakes. They cannot live without cover, and if there are no holes in the rocks for them to retire to they burrow, just as a rabbit does, in the earth and sea turf under the water, and there sit, claws forward, ready to seize any intruder or to haul in any morsel which the sea washes into the hole. It is doubtful whether lobsters remain awake all day on the off chance of a meal coming to their door. More probably they sleep off the fatigue of the previous night's wanderings. But their antennae are so sensitive that they warn them if anything touches them or even stirs the water. No electric bell could work more instantaneously.

Rushville, Ind.

MESSRS ELY BROS.: I have been a great sufferer from catarrh and hay fever and tried may things, but found no permanent relief until I found it in Ely's Cream Balm about eight years ago, and we have been fast friends ever since. (Rev.) R. M. BENTLEY.

MESSRS. ELY BROS.: Find enclosed 50 cents, for which please send me your Cream Balm. I find your remedy the quickest and most permanent cure for cold in the head, catarrh, etc. Yours truly, DELL M. POTTER, Gen. Mgr., Arizona Gold Mining Co.

Machinery Tones.

Engineers judge of the condition of their machinery by the tone it gives out while running. Every engine, whether stationary or locomotive, has a particular tone of its own. The engineer becomes accustomed to that, and any departure from it at once excites a suspicion that all is not right. The engineer may not know what is the matter; he may have no ear for music, but the change in the tone of his machine will be at once perceptible and, being instantly recognized, will cause him to start on an immediate investigation.

Sour Stomach

No appetite, loss of strength, nervousness, headache, constipation, bad breath, general debility, sour risings, and catarrh of the stomach are all due to indigestion. Kodol cures indigestion. This new discovery represents the natural juices of digestion as they exist in a healthy stomach, combined with the greatest known tonic and reconstructive properties. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure does not only cure indigestion and dyspepsia, but this famous remedy cures all stomach troubles by cleansing, purifying, sweetening and strengthening the mucous membranes lining the stomach.

An Odd Present.

There is a strange custom prevalent among the old fishermen and hand loom weavers of Girvan, Scotland. The industries of the town are fast decaying, only a very few weavers being kept busy now, so the younger generation have to migrate in search of fresh fields. When the grownup sons and daughters have been successful in their new spheres, often at the other side of the world, their thoughts are busy with the "auld folks." A very common present to the latter is that of a "certificate" giving the right to be buried in the old churchyard. Thus their parents' last resting place is secured, and so common is the custom that only to a stranger does its grewsomeness appeal. The old people tell of the possession with pride and thankfulness.

A Worm's Skin.

The Annelid Podynce cirrata is a mean looking worm about an inch and a half in length, of flattened shape, blunt at both ends, apparently covered by a smooth skin of a dull brown color. On being touched it throws itself into elegant serpentine curves, and then what appears to be the upper skin is seen to be composed of a great number of round, flat, membranous plates or shields, arranged in two rows, overlapping each other. These, though of larger size, are attached to the body only by a small point in the center of their sides, so that when the animal moves the edges of these shields are lifted and reveal their live structure, sliding upon each other in a singular manner.

A Heavy Load.

To lift that load off of the stomach take Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It digests what you eat. Sour stomach, belching, gas on stomach and all disorders of the stomach that are curable, are instantly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. S. P. Storrs, a druggist at 297 Maine street, New Britain, Conn., says: "Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is giving such universal satisfaction and is so surely becoming the positive relief and subsequent cure for this distressing ailment, I feel that I am always sure to satisty and gratify my customers by recommending it to them. I write this to show how well the remedy is spoken of here." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure was discovered after years of scientific experiments and will positively cure all stomach troubles. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

The Word "Blackmailing."

The word "blackmailing," derived from the Anglo-Saxon "mal" (tax) and the old French "maille" (a coin of small value), was originally applied to rents paid in kind, in order to distinguish them from payments made in silver or "white" payments. About the sixteenth century it was applied to money paid as the price of protection from freebooters. This was declared illegal by Elizabeth, but flourished in the highlands of Scotland until after Culloden, in 1745.

"Blackmail" is mentioned in Archbishop Hamilton's Catechisme (1552). One of the most picturesque leviers of blackmail was Rob Roy, who grew famous in this connection about the year 1730. In its modern use blackmail is the extortion of money by threat of public exposure.

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

New Way of Using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Mr. Arthur Chapman, writing from Durban, Natal, South Africa, says: "As a proof that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a cure suitable for old and young, I pen you the following: A neighbor of mine had a child just over two months old. It had a very bad cough and the parents did not know what to give it. I suggested that if they would get a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and put some upon the dummy teat the baby was sucking it would no doubt cure the child. This they did and brought about a quick relief and cured the baby." This remedy is for sale by H. C. Giesler.

Internally All Right.

A country sexton in England officiated at a funeral clad in a red waistcoat. At the conclusion of the obsequies the vicar gently remonstrated with the old gravedigger, saying: "Robert, you should not wear a red waistcoat at a funeral. You hurt the feelings of the mourners." Robert replied, placing his hand on his breast, "Well, what does it matter, sir, so long as the heart is black?"

Ways of the Irish Jarvey.

A good story, which illustrates the absolute genius with which an Irish jarvey extracts money from his victims, is told in an English journal. A commercial traveler wanted to take a side car in Belfast and, aware of the rapacity of the average jarvey, insisted on knowing the exact fare before getting on the car. The following dialogue ensued:

Commercial Traveler—What's the fare to C——, jarvey?

Jarvey—Ach, that's alroight, sorr. Just get on.

Commercial Traveler—Now, look here, what's the fare to C——?

Jarvey—Shure, it's alroight, sorr. Just jump up.

Commercial Traveler—I insist on knowing the fare before I get on.

Jarvey—Bedad, sorr, I'm that hard up I'll drive you for nothing at all, sorr.

Needless to say, when the commercial traveler finally got to his destination he was mulcted of an amount much larger than the legitimate fare, an amount he had to pay to save his face.

One Address Enough.

The clerk in the express office was just about to toss the package back of the counter when he noticed that it was addressed on both sides. "It's good I saw that. Charges might have been collected twice," he said. "That's funny," remarked the shipper. "I just paid the charges, you know." "Yes," responded the clerk, "and I marked it paid, but the second address might have caused them to collect at the other end. You see, I checked it off paid on one side, but when it reaches the other office it might be that the prepaid mark would be on the bottom. That would bring the other address up, and, seeing no check mark there, the receiving office would mark it collect and the party to whom it was addressed would pay the second express charges." "And I thought I was doing something to expedite matters in putting the address on both sides," commented the shipper.—Philadelphia Record.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Is Pleasant to Take.

The finest quality of granulated loaf sugar is used in the manufacture of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and the roots used in its preparation give it flavor similar to maple syrup, making it quite pleasant to take. Mr. W. L. Roderick, of Poolesville, Md., in speaking of this remedy, says: "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy with my children for several years and can truthfully say it is the best preparation of the kind I know of. The children like to take it and it has no injurious after effect. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

Woman's Power.

"Oh, yes. They've got all their ancestors hung except a few who were hanged on earth."—Town Topics.

Proverbs

"When the butter won't come put a penny in the churn," is an old time dairy proverb. It often seems to work though no one has ever told why.

When mothers are worried because the children do not gain strength and flesh we say give them Scott's Emulsion.

It is like the penny in the milk because it works and because there is something astonishing about it.

Scott's Emulsion is simply a milk of pure cod liver oil with some hypophosphites especially prepared for delicate stomachs.

Children take to it naturally because they like the taste and the remedy takes just as naturally to the children because it is so perfectly adapted to their wants.

For all weak and pale and thin children Scott's Emulsion is the most satisfactory treatment.

We will send you the penny, i. e., a sample free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

Winning an Opponent.

In the campaign of 1900 Senator Cullom was called on to face a large audience in his home city of Springfield. He saw in the audience a fellow townsman who had formerly been an influential Republican, but who had joined the opposing party and displayed a dangerous activity in its support. This man arose from his seat and apparently was ready to begin a series of "catch questions." Before this intention could be put into execution Senator Cullom paused in his speech and in a conversational tone called out: "John Simpson, you're too old a man to stand up in any audience that I talk to. Just come right up here and hold down this chair next to mine." The invitation was accepted and at the close of the mass meeting the man announced that he was "back in the fold," and had "come to stay."

DISEASED KIDNEYS MADE WELL AGAIN.

Mr. Tompkins Troubled for Years, but Cal-cura Solvent Cured Him.

From one of the pleasant villages in the Catskill Mountains comes a letter from Nathaniel Tompkins, Windham Centre, N. Y. He says: "To-day you can ask what has made me feel ten years younger and I will tell you. It was the new medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, discovered by the well-known Dr. David Kennedy. For years I was troubled with my kidneys, but I am all right now."

Dr. Kennedy said he regarded his new medicine as the culminating achievement of his life, and he was right, for Cal-cura Solvent cures where all else fails. It enriches the blood, aids digestion, regulates the bowels and sets the liver at work. It is mild, but thorough. Its effects are lasting. All druggists, $1.00.

Smith Stranahan died at the residence of his son, on Broadway in this city, on the morning of the 13th inst. Although in feeble health for a year, Mr. Stranahan was about, as usual, until two days before his death, from which time he was confined to his bed. The deceased was born in the town of Granby, and was nearly 72 years of age. His entire life had been spent as a farmer in his native town, with the exception of the past three years, when, upon the occasion of the death of Mrs. Stranahan, he took up his residence with his son. He was a man of sound judgment, strict integrity, and of an unostentatious and retiring disposition. For many years he was one of the active leaders of the Republican party in his town and zealously devoted to its cause. He was also a consistent member of the First Methodist Church of Fulton.

Two children survive him—Hon. N. N. Stranahan of New York city, and Mrs. Henry L. Woodward of Albany.

The funeral services were held from the late residence on Tuesday, Nov. 15, at 2 p. m., and were conducted by the Rev. John Richards. A mixed quartet, under the direction of Mr. N. H. Gilbert, rendered appropriate selections, and a large assemblage of friends was present to pay a last tribute of respect to the deceased.

The "Illustrious Hybrid."

George Sand, or Mme. Dudevant, the famous French woman writer, scandalized her literary friends by wearing men's clothes. "A long gray overcoat," she herself says she wore, "a woolen tie and—and—a pair of boots." These boots were her joy. "I longed to sleep with them. On their little iron shod heels I was firm on my feet and trotted from one end of Paris to the other." She also smoked in public, cigarettes—even cigars—so that her teeth were much discolored. It was this outward mannishness that won for her the title of "Illustrious Hybrid." However, her hands were beautifully feminine. "It was," says one who knew her, "a delicate hand, all grace, tact, firmness and flexibility. One could not dream of a more perfect combination of the French working class woman's and the aristocratic or royal lady's hand." It will be recalled that George Sand boasted, "The blood of kings is mixed in my veins with the blood of the poor and lowly." She was, as she termed it, "astride" of the two classes, the peasantry and the aristocracy.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Matters Discussed of Supreme Importance to Fulton, Embracing Barge Canal and Proposed New Post Office Building.

A special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held last Wednesday evening in the court room of the City Hall. It was perhaps the most interesting and instructive of any held recently by the Chamber.

President Redhead stated that the political campaign had interfered somewhat with the dates assigned for the regular meetings, but now that the contest was over, the Chamber would resume its sessions.

The minutes of the last session were read and approved.

Secretary B. W. Bennett read a number of letters from manufacturers seeking new locations. The replies to the communications were also read. During the past year, at least sixty-one concerns had been written to and efforts had been made to interest them in Fulton as a manufacturing center.

Mr. Redhead complimented the secretary on the zeal he had displayed, which was evidence that the officers of the Chamber were watchful of the best interests of the city.

In view of the proposed Library building Mr. Redhead asked if the committee which had been entrusted with the project of securing a new street between First and Second, adjacent to the Episcopal church, had anything to report.

Mr. Chauncey stated that a number of names had been secured to the petition and that the matter had been presented to the Board of Public Works for action. The city engineer had been instructed to make an estimate of the cost. The Board, however, had deferred further action because of a lack of money necessary to complete the work. The matter now awaited the action of the Board of Public Works.

[illegible] that was appointed [illegible]

The following letter was read by the secretary, setting forth Fulton's many advantages as a business and manufacturing centre and its importance in Oswego County. This letter was addressed to Congressman Knapp with a view of enlisting his co-operation in securing a new post office building for this city:

Fulton, N. Y., Sept. 26, 1904.

Hon. Charles W. Knapp, Lowville, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Your recent letter asking for further information regarding Fulton's requirements in the line of a post office building, was duly received, and I take pleasure in replying as follows:

In your Congressional district, Fulton is second only to the city of Watertown for business progress and enterprise. Indeed, it is doubtful if Watertown itself can show the increase that Fulton does in the post office receipts. When our present postmaster took possession of this office the receipts were $11,000 per annum. Now, after six years, the receipts amount to more than $16,000 per annum; or an increase of over 50 per cent. Fulton's manufactories are extensive and increasing, and the past decade has witnessed in this city a marked increase in business interests and prosperity.

Geographically, Fulton is admirably situated for the development of the extensive industries now located here, situated on the Oswego River at the falls made famous in history and fiction, and with a water-power of unfailing regularity, mills and factories sprang up, have been developed, and now Fulton is widely known as an important manufacturing town.

Here are located the extensive mills of the American Woolen Company, employing 1,500 hands; the Hunter Arms Company's factory with its 400 skilled mechanics is here. Here, too, are the extensive paper and pulp mills of the Victoria, the Eureka, the Fulton, the Granby, the Volney, the Battle Island and the United Box Board and Paper Companies. Here are four large flour mills; the American factory of the Nestle Food Company; two important cutlery manufacturing plants; machine shops, boat building, wood working, the Kaptop Broom factory, the Fort Stanwix Canning Company, the American Tobacco Company's large sorting house and many minor industries, all tending to bring Fulton into growing publicity as a busy manufacturing center.

Fulton is on the New York Central, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, and the New York, Ontario & Western Railroad, and on the Oswego branch of the Erie Canal. Being in the direct line of travel over three great trunk lines from New York to Lake Ontario, traffic is considerable and twenty-six passenger trains daily stop at the depots of this city. Navigation on the river and canal brings freight and pleasure crafts, and all the launches en route from the interior, or from New York or southern waters pass through here on their way to the Thousand Islands and the St. Lawrence River. Thus Fulton enjoys many transient visitors and is brought much into the public gaze.

The population of Fulton is approximately 10,000 at present, with a steady growth. The public improvements are many and modern and the city government is conducted under a charter granted by the Legislature in 1901, and creating this, the youngest city in the Empire State. Our system of public schools is a source of abundant satisfaction and ranks exceeding high in educational circles. The total enrollment of pupils for this Fall term is 1,950; 45 teachers are employed and seven school buildings are maintained.

A Public Library building, the gift of Andrew Carnegie, is to be erected in the Spring, the city having complied with the necessary conditions governing such matters.

The people of Fulton are proud of their beautiful city, with its grand and picturesque river, its broad, well-shaded streets, handsome residences and well-kept lawns, busy mills and factories, and thrift and enterprise of its citizens, but they are not proud of their post office accommodations, and much discontent exists over the uninviting and inadequate quarters furnished them to use as a post office.

The present post office is located in a rented block, very narrow and not well situated. There is not sufficient room in the lobby for patrons of the office to transact their business, nor sufficient room inside the office for the clerks to do their work. But as a matter of fact there is no rentable property available in this city suitable for our post office. Excellent sites are available at reasonable prices, where a building could be erected and afford proper accommodations for the post office of Fulton, and such a building the people of this city most earnestly desire.

Business at the Fulton post office is steadily increasing, amounting to between $16,000 and $17,000 per annum now, and providing seven city carriers and six rural delivery routes, it will necessarily show further increase soon, for at least two and probably three additional rural routes will be established, and one or two additional city carriers added. Then the post office of Fulton will deliver its mail, not only to the city proper, but to a rural territory of ninety square miles.

The need of a post office building is pressing now, and in this growing community it will be an imperative necessity in the near future. We believe an appropriation of $50,000 or $60,000 would be sufficient for the requirements, including the site, which would cost $5,000 or $10,000.

If you understood the intense feeling of dissatisfaction that exists over the present post office quarters and knew how concerned Fultonians were to improve and beautify their city by a suitable Federal building, you would, we know, make strenuous efforts to secure the passage of the measure suggested. And it would seem, with the Republican party in power, and with such Fulton men in public office as the Hon. N. N. Stranahan and the Hon. T. D. Lewis, that the prestige Fulton now enjoys is such that this matter could be well handled at the present time, perhaps better than at some time in the future.

Whatever you will [illegible] within our power, and we hope to enjoy this pleasure in the near future.

We beg to remain

Yours very respectfully,

THE FULTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,

Per E. R. REDHEAD, President.

CONGRESSMAN KNAPP'S REPLY.

Lowville, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1904.

Mr. E. R. Redhead, Fulton, N. Y.

My Dear Sir: I am in receipt of your kind letter of the 26th ultimo with reference to Fulton, its importance and industries, looking to the introduction of a bill providing for the erection of a government building at your place. I thank you very much for the full information you give me, and beg to say that when Congress convenes in December I will introduce the bill and use your letter as the basis of an argument why it should be favorably reported to Congress.

With renewed thanks, I am,

Very truly yours,

CHAS. L. KNAPP.

Mr. Redhead was of the opinion that a new and substantial structure—one that would be an ornament to the city—was one of the certainties of the future. The measure, though, would require persistent effort, and while he had every confidence in Congressman Knapp, active co-operation with our representative was necessary to the successful carrying out of the project.

The Freeman Boat Company came in for a large share of attention. While it might be considered a comparatively new industry, it was capable of development into a most profitable business, Mr. Redhead stated. It was capitalized at $10,000, with $6,000 paid in. There was a scarcity of working capital but an abundance of orders. The Parker engine manufactory in the same building was also capable of extension. Attention was also called to these industries in the hope that local capitalists might become interested.

Mr. Freeman was present and was called upon. He verified all that had been said. There was an increasing demand for the product of his factory. The boat was considered very good. If the necessary capital were obtained the business could not fail to develop into a large industry.

The contention between David Baldwin and the Lackawanna railroad was discussed. Mr. Redhead asserted that Mr. Baldwin's case was one of peculiar hardship, and it looked most unjust on the part of the railroad. Mr. Baldwin had built a planing mill at the section designated, but access to it was practically cut off because of the action of the Lackawanna officials. The railroad company objected to putting in a crossing at grade, taking refuge in the assertion that permission would first have to be secured from the State Board of Railroad Commissioners.

Attorney Hillick gave a detailed history of the case and also stated that in his judgment, before definite action were taken, it would be necessary for the new Board of Public Works to adopt a resolution authorizing that Leitch street be laid out from the west line of the railroad company's line to Phillips street and dedicated to the public service.

A resolution was adopted appointing a committee composed of Messrs. Lovejoy and Rigley, of which Mr. Redhead afterward became a member, to wait upon the Board of Public Works and urge that body to take immediate action.

Mr. Redhead hoped that this proceeding would soon bring relief to Mr. Baldwin.

The proposed route of the Barge Canal through Fulton was then taken up and was most intelligently presented by Mr. George Chauncey, who was thoroughly conversant with the subject. He prefaced his remarks with the statement that Resident Engineer Cushman was a man of excellent ability and an expert, and would do all in his power to aid the users of water-power in this city.

There had been more than one plan submitted, Mr. Chauncey stated, for the approval of the State Board, but the one that might be considered the most practicable was to have the canal enter the river immediately above the upper dam, which would be raised about 6½ feet. The canal will occupy the bed of the river, will have a width of about 60 feet and will be protected with sea walls. A mammoth lock will be constructed immediately above the lower bridge, 328 feet long and 28 feet wide; new mechanism for admitting [illegible] be raised [illegible] stretch of clear water, 12 feet deep, from within half a mile of Phoenix to about half a mile above the present Minetto dam. The present Battle Island Power station will go out of commission, but will be established farther down the river in the vicinity of the new dam, which will be erected. A line of docks will be constructed from the Broadway bridge to the vicinity of about opposite the Universalist church, and will be 60 feet wide. The old canal will be filled in and the canal bridge at Oneida street will be lowered to street grade, making it uniform with the new river bridge. The locks will be 328 feet long and 28 feet wide. There will be no interruption to traffic on the old canal until the new one is completed. The raising of the dams will give to the users of water-power an increase of at least 25 per cent. head on each wheel. There will be two Fulton contracts, bids for which will be advertised and the contracts let about Feb. 1. What is known as Contract No. 1 will mean an expenditure of about $1,000,000; while Contract No. 2 will require an outlay of about $500,000. It is estimated that three years will be required to complete No. 1, and about two years will see the completion of Contract No. 2. The entire stretch between Three Rivers and Oswego is about 22 miles. When the work is completed it will make the Oswego route the most logical and economical between the lakes and the seaboard.

Mr. Chauncey stated in conclusion that every request that had been made by the users of water-power along the river had been treated with the utmost courtesy by Engineer Cushman.

Mr. Redhead believed that the construction and operation of the new barge canal would have a most important bearing on Fulton's future, and it was of the utmost importance that developments be carefully watched and the best results obtained. The improvements could not fail to benefit the manufacturing industries and the community as well.

A resolution to adjourn was adopted.

DIED.

Nelson Keller, aged 85, died at the home of his nephew, Mr. Runah Keller in Utica street, on Saturday morning after a long illness. The funeral was held on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock and interment was made at Palermo Centre.

The many friends of Miss Sarah A. Edgarton were shocked to hear on Wednesday that she had passed away at her home in Beech street. Miss Edgarton had spent Tuesday evening with her brother, Mr. W. D. Edgarton, and returned to her home in her usual health. Wednesday morning Mr. Edgarton noticed that her window shades remained down later than usual and upon going to his sister's home found her unconscious from the effects of coal gas which had escaped from the stove. Dr. Wells was hastily summoned, but medical skill was powerless to restore her and she died at noon. The deceased was 87 years of age and is survived by her brother. The funeral services were held from the late home on Thursday afternoon, the Rev. G. R. Foster officiating. Interment was made in Mt. Adnah.

Porter P. Butts, aged 66, died at his home in Sodus on Thursday, after a lingering, painful illness. The deceased was well known in this city, where he made many firm friends during his visits with his son, Mr. Watson A. Butts. He was a most exemplary man and was greatly beloved by all who were permitted to know him. He was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church and was an elder in the Sodus church at the time of his demise. Mr. Butts was born at Pompey Hill; his early years were devoted to school teaching and later he was a most successful farmer in his home town. About four years ago failing health compelled him to retire from life's activities, and the days became a patient waiting for the final summons. The funeral services were held on Sunday from the Presbyterian church in Sodus. A widow, three sons, Messrs. Watson of this city, Raymond and Henry of Sodus, a brother and two sisters, are left with many friends to mourn the loss of a tender, loyal companion and friend.

[illegible] morning to learn of the death of this widely known and respected lady, her demise having occurred at St. Luke's hospital, Chicago, Sunday, October 30th.

The deceased was born in New York in 1846, later removing to Michigan, when in 1887, with her sister Anna, she came to Emmons county. The two ladies took homesteads near Winchester, and for a number of years were among the county's pioneer school teachers, after which they embarked in the general merchandise and ranch business. With the advent of Linton the ladies retired from business, closing a very successful career, one in which friendships were made that shall last through life.

For some years past Miss Petrie's health has been failing, and recently she went to the Chicago hospital in the hope of relief, her sister Anna accompanying her and remaining by her bedside until the final summons. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Petrie were also with her during her last hours.

In her nearly twenty years of residence in the county, Miss Petrie has, by an amiable disposition and beautiful, womanly qualities, endeared herself to the many who made her acquaintance.

The remains were brought to Linton yesterday and the funeral took place this morning, services being held at the home of her brother, W. E. Petrie, the ceremony being conducted by Rev. J. E. McKinney and Rev. J. A. Lemery. In accordance with a wish expressed by Miss Petrie before her death, interment was made in the Linton cemetery.

Of the immediate relatives left to mourn the departure of a sister are two brothers, Wallace and Fred, of Linton, and two sisters, Miss Anna Petrie of Linton, and Mrs. Alice Irvine of Chicago.

CORA WILLIAMS AS "ANNETTE."

"Nothing succeeds like success," and of all the comic opera successes of the past twenty-five years no work of this kind has been produced which has equalled the popularity of Pixley and Luders' "King Dodo," which is now in its fourth season. Last year this merry opera played nearly all of the big cities in the country and everywhere met with a most flattering reception. The reasons for "King Dodo's" popularity are easily found. In the first place, it is genuinely funny. The fun is clean, there is not a line which even the most cautious could take offense. The other reason is the music. There are many charming musical numbers as have been given to a work of this kind. From the opening chorus until that sung as the curtain is going down on the final act there is a flow of melody which not only pleases the ear, but also is of that quality which is heard is not easily forgotten. "King Dodo" is presented with all of its completeness of production which signalized its run at the Theatre, New York City; the Studebaker in Chicago and the Tremont, Boston for twelve weeks, by a big cast [illegible] company [illegible] church will [illegible]

HIS MAJESTY THE TURKEY

By A. W. FERRIN

[Copyright, 1904, by A. W. Ferrin.]

It was Benjamin Franklin who said that the turkey and not the bald-headed eagle should be the American national bird, and the tribute which the patriot-philosopher paid to the piece de resistance of the Thanksgiving day feast is better deserved now than it was in Franklin's day, for, while an occasional eagle still flits from crag to crag, on the turkey the sun never sets. The turkey follows the flag, whatever the constitution may do, and wherever Uncle Sam has set his foot, whether in the snowdrifts of Alaska or on the flowery soil of the Philippines, Thanksgiving day is honored equally with the Fourth of July. Even in the effete capitals of Europe the aristocratic partridge and pheasant have to give way on Thanksgiving day to the ponderous gobbler.

"RAISING" A TURKEY IN KENTUCKY.

The eagle is a pirate; he cannot sing and his beauty is greatest at a distance. All he can do is to soar aloft, and, while his single stunt may be emblematic of freedom, it is of a freedom which respects not the rights of others. Consider the turkey, how he grows. He toils not, neither does he spin, yet Solomon in all his glory never ate more delicious food than he furnishes. His plumage ranks him little lower than the peacock, while his "gobble" makes music compared to the hoarse scream of the far flying eagle. All he lives for is to enhance the joy of his human friends. Then, too, he is distinctly an American. The bald eagle is, it is true, also an aborigine, but there are other eagles. The czar, the kaiser and the emperor of Austria bear eagles on their shields. The turkey was never even heard of in Europe before the voyage of Columbus. For nearly four authenticated centuries the turkey has roosted on his genealogical tree in the forests of America, and before the white man came the red Indians who sprang from the soil venerated him.

The first turkey appeared in written history about the year 1520, when the Spanish conquerors of Mexico found him at the court of Montezuma. Specimens of the new fowl were sent home to Spain by the companions of Cortes, and within five years thereafter the turkey appeared in England, where he soon became a general favorite. Civil and natural history had not then been reduced to an exact science, and in the common confusion of America with the Indies the turkey became involved. The name Turkey was then often used as a synonym for the orient; hence the erroneous appellation which the bird has never been able to shake off. The French made the same mistake, for they call the turkey to this day dinde or coq d'Inde (Indian cock). However, the turkey by another name would taste no sweeter, and popular disapprobation of the sultan has never extended to the fowl which bears his country's name.

It is a moot question among ornithologists whether the present day turkey is a descendant of the Mexican bird domesticated in England and brought back to America by the pilgrim fathers or is the wild turkey of the United States tamed. Whatever the tame turkey's remotest origin, the breeders frequently introduce into their flocks wild turkeys captured in the woods or raised from eggs to give stamina and the gamy taste so prized by epicures, and the barnyard bird may now trace his lineage to Montezuma's imperial coop or to the wilds of the north, as he chooses.

necticut a close second, but now western turkeys are coming into the eastern markets in large numbers, and Kentucky is also making a good bid for the banner.

The Rhode Island turkey still keeps his reputation as the best born and best bred bird of his species in America, however, and it is from the Rhode Island ranges that the president's turkey comes every year. Hiram Vose, the famous turkey buyer, has been sending annual turkeys to the White House since General Grant was there, and no complaint as to their quality has yet been registered by the recipients.

The "bronze" turkey is Rhode Island's pride, and this bird adds to its beauty unparalleled delicacy of flesh and immense size. It is recorded that the turkey sent by Mr. Vose to General Grant weighed forty pounds. Mr. Cleveland's turkey weighed fifty pounds, but Mr. Cleveland is a much heavier man than Grant was. For President Roosevelt the farms of Rhode Island have been scoured this year for a record breaking heavyweight and one with a reputation as a fighter and the father of a large family. Most of the presidential turkeys have been raised at Westerly, on the farm of Elias Miner, otherwise "Asia" Miner by analogy.

In Kentucky, as in Rhode Island, the outdoor method of turkey raising is being extensively practiced. Turkeys have always been regarded as difficult to rear. The new method is to imitate natural conditions as far as practicable and thus to save the flocks from the epidemics and other ills of civilization to which they have long been heirs. The birds are provided with neither shelter nor roosts even in winter. They are fed liberally and in the spring are furnished with half barrels for nests, but there is as little interference as possible with their ways of living. Whole corn, sweet apples and grasshoppers are considered the best turkey food. Cornmeal, which is more commonly used, fattens the bird more rapidly, but renders the flesh of poorer quality. Breeding by selection, picking out the largest individuals from generation to generation, is largely responsible for the greater size which the domestic turkey obtains over the wild bird.

Thousands of turkeys are raised by Kentucky negroes on their little holdings, and to the negroes also falls the task of slaughtering and picking the fowls grown on the large ranges. For this work they get 2½ cents per turk. The roads during the early days of November are dotted with marching flocks leaving the farms and converging on the towns, where the birds are dressed and packed into refrigerator cars or placed alive in wicker baskets to be shipped to every point of the compass.

Despite the abundance of turkeys in Kentucky, the negro's proverbial love of fowl and the natural disposition to regard stolen fruits, or turkeys, as sweetest require the owner of a turkey yard to be careful about locking up at night. Turkey shoots and raffles are very popular with the colored folk, and the lucky winner of a bird carrying home his prize in triumph would not change places with Caesar leading captive kings in chains behind his chariot.

The First Thanksgiving.

The earliest recorded appointment of a Thanksgiving day was in 1623. There had been an unfavorable season for the young American colony, and starvation seemed imminent. To avert the terrible calamity a day of humiliation and prayer was appointed, and in the midst of the solemn observance the rain descended copiously. The crops afterward yielded an abundant harvest. To thank God "with all their hearts for the good world and the good things in it," the first American Thanksgiving was officially proclaimed

Dean Hole's Wit.

On one occasion Dean Hole, the well known English clergyman, with Mrs. Hole, landed at Dover, much exhausted, after a rough crossing of the English channel. While waiting for the train the dean pored over the railway regulations. "Ah," he said, addressing the station inspector, "it's one consolation after such a crossing and this tiresome wait that we go back at half price." "I don't understand, sir," was the official's reply. "There is no special reduction." "Oh, yes, there is," said the dean. "I've just been reading all your notices, and you state that you take returned empties at much reduced rate." Once when the dean was playing whist for threepenny points he appeared to be very well provided with threepenny bits. "Ah," his opponent remarked, "have you the offertory with you?" "What, sir," the dean answered, "do you recognize your miserable contributions?"

The Repulsive Squid.

Having caught a squid, a landlubber at sea thus describes him: "The squid is a small cousin of the octopus. He is about one foot long from the tip of his tail to the tip of his tentacles (extended). Normally he is of a pale tan and rich sienna, with darker spots, but he has the power to become if frightened almost colorless in an instant. In extreme fright he discharges a dirty brown secretion in the manner of his kind and escapes while the enemy is enveloped in the impenetrable smudge. The head is principally arms, with a formidable parrot-like beak in the center, while his eyes are located just back of the arm cluster. The tail is of the shape of a spearhead, with rounded barbs. I did not examine him very closely because of his snakelike tentacles, and, further, because his beak, rasping on the spear iron, was most unpleasant. We dropped him overboard, and I was glad to see him go."

Thanksgiving with a Vengeance

BY WILLIS B. HAWKINS

AUNT ELECTA

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY WILLIS B. HAWKINS.

The Old House.

THE sitting room fire was to be built, but Chester Harding, with the basket of kindling before him, sat in the low, splint bottom rocker and stared gloomily into the deep, old fashioned fireplace—the same chair in which his gentle little mother, twenty-five years ago, had rocked and crooned and kissed away his baby troubles—the same fireplace before which his own beautiful wife had last night lulled their precious baby boy to sleep.

The dead ashes on the cold hearthstone seemed to have something in common with the burnt out hopes that lay so chill upon his comfortless heart. What had he to be thankful for?

Soon the dear old homestead was to pass to hands far worse than those of strangers, hands that would desecrate and destroy through sheer malevolence.

Chester.

Motherless at nine and fatherless three years later, he had been left to the care of his Aunt Electa, a strong, despotic spinster with decided opinions and a vigorous way of expressing them. His father, not long before his death, had been worsted in a financial transaction by his own brother, Chester's Uncle James, and had been compelled to mortgage the homestead and its contents to save himself from immediate ruin. Aunt Electa had ever afterward detested her brother James and openly denounced his pious professions as wicked hypocrisy. She had drawn him (Chester) into the relentless warfare against Uncle James, and the vengeful uncle, cut from the same piece as the vengeful aunt, had bought and foreclosed the mortgage in the hope of throwing her and her ward out of house and home. Aunt Electa, enraged to almost superhuman energy, had moved heaven and earth to raise the necessary money and had bid in the property.

Chester was aroused from these recollections by his wife, who had come to dress the baby by the sitting room fire. The joy of the sun bright morning was in her thankful young mother heart as she began with merry mock seriousness to chide her dilatory husband for not having yet even laid the kindling.

Uncle James.

"Look at your naughty papa," she said, holding the baby before him. "Shame on a big, lazy fellow!" She took a little dimpled hand in hers and pointed a tiny pink finger at the object of this make believe shame.

Chester turned toward her with a forced smile and took the baby from her arms.

"Why, Chester, what is the matter?"

He kissed her trembling lips. "There!" said he. "I was only foolish for a moment over some thoughts about the long ago past, before I had your beautiful love to make me always, always happy."

Still she appealed with her big brown eyes turned wistfully up to his, and he saw that it was useless to delay her enlightenment longer. Already her Thanksgiving day had been spoiled.

"Well, little girl," he said, with an effort to make light of the matter, "we must give up the old home. I have been served with notice to quit."

"Why? What for? Notice from whom?" It was shocking intelligence. She knew how dearly Chester loved the old place he had lived in so long.

"From Uncle James," he answered. "He owns everything here. Aunt Electa left no will, and her brother, being next of kin, inherits all she owned."

Mrs. Harding had risen and now stood beside the chair, holding her husband's head against her breast. "Never mind, dear," she said, with tender sympathy; "we shall some time have money enough to buy the old place back."

Mrs. Harding.

But Chester shook his head. "Some time is as bad as no time. In a week Uncle James will have the house torn down and its contents scattered to the winds. I know him. He will chop down every tree and gloat over the knowledge that each stroke of the ax cuts into my heart. He hates me as relentlessly as Aunt Electa hated him."

The rest of the forenoon was passed in dismal despair. Mrs. Harding, with that niceness of perception which comes of true sympathy, had decided not to have the Thanksgiving dinner she had planned. It would be a mockery, a reminder of the blessings Chester had missed. So she set the table for the simple meal they ordinarily had at midday. It was nearly ready when the doorbell rang, and Chester, inwardly resenting intrusion, responded.

"I trust I am in time for dinner," said a cheery faced man whom Chester recognized as the new Methodist minister, who had been pointed out to him on the street the day before.

"Such as it is, you are in time for it," said Chester.

The minister had stepped inside before even this dubious invitation was extended. Chester showed him to the sitting room and went to tell his wife.

"Did—you—ever!" When a little woman opens a pair of big brown eyes to their widest limits, utters those three short words as if each were a separate explosion and drops her hands in final despair you may know fate has done its worst. And if you have long been under the strain of a really great grief this heaping on of petty misfortunes is apt to stir a sense of the ridiculous in you. Chester, looking into his wife's dejected face, burst into uncontrollable laughter, which it was difficult to keep the minister from hearing. Grasping his sides with both hands, he staggered about the dining room, trying in vain to suppress his paroxysms, until his wife, catching the infection, joined him in the idiotic Indian dance, stuffing her apron into her mouth to smother her shrieks of laughter.

The Baby.

Near the end of the dinner the minister chanced to speak of Chester as a member of his church, and Chester corrected him. It then transpired that the minister, having received an invitation to dine with James Harding, had asked for "Mr. Harding's" house, and had been directed to Chester's.

After due apologies for his mistake the minister asked the privilege of reading a chapter from the Scriptures, and Mrs. Harding brought Aunt Electa's big clasp Bible, the only one in the house. At sight of the book Chester reproached himself for having shamelessly forgotten a tacit promise he had made to his aunt on the day of her death.

The Bible.

Aunt Electa's fatal illness had been characteristic of her—short, sharp, violent—and she had died in a convulsion. To the last she had stoutly maintained that she was not going to die and had insisted on being pillowed up that she might fortify herself to bear her pains by reading her Bible.

"Chet," she had said between writhings, "I don't lay the claim I ought to religion; but, I tell you, when I'm in pain or trouble there's nothing that bolsters me up like the book of Job. When you're in trouble and haven't any old aunt to come to read the book of Job. It's mighty solacing." In an hour she was dead.

Now, when the minister was gone, Chester, sitting again in the low rocker with the baby on his knee, asked his wife to read the book of Job to him.

She had finished the first chapter and begun the second when she turned the leaf and a loose sheet fluttered out. As she picked it up her eye caught the boldly written words, "Last Will and Testament of Electa Harding."

"Chester!" Her tone startled him. "The will!" She almost fainted.

The document was offered for probate next day, and, though the witnesses had moved away, there was no doubt about Aunt Electa's sprawling signature.

"What could have possessed her to hide it away in such a place?" asked the mistress of the old homestead.

"I think I know," answered the master. "I think she wanted Uncle James to hope awhile so that he might suffer all the more in the end."

"Isn't that a dreadful spirit to wish to pursue one's enemy even after one is dead? Chester, do you think Aunt Electa is in heaven?"

"She is if she knows how badly Uncle James is cut up."

WOMEN AS WORKERS

HAVE ALWAYS HAD THEIR SHARE OF THE WORLD'S LABOR.

Must Be Emancipated From Toil, but Must Not Think of Governing Themselves, According to Dr. Lyman Abbott.

In a "woman's number" the Outlook has this to say regarding woman's future activities:

"That women are to become permanently the workers of the world in the material sense no man believes who values the spiritual welfare of society; that in the future the great majority of women are to deal with things and not with ideas—to set themselves to material rather than to spiritual tasks, to cast in their fortunes with men in doing the drudgery of the world—is a prospect which no man who cares for the betterment of humanity could face with equanimity."

This is all very gallant and quite in line with the peculiar mixed-up-ness of the editor, Dr. Lyman Abbott, in all that has to do with the modern woman.

He approves higher education, professional activity if duly graceful in execution, philanthropic work without stint—in fact, we know of nothing Dr. Abbott regards as wholly reprehensible and dangerous but the exercise of the franchise.

This is "the drudgery of the world," apparently, which tries the soul of this reverend editor.

But how amazingly far removed from the facts of this workaday world Dr. Abbott's fond picture of woman is!

He thinks that woman's "material tasks" are a danger of the present and a possibility for the future instead of being a prosaic but universal fact of both the present and the past.

Woman has always had a most generous share of the world's drudgery, and the main hope for the future is that she shall be relieved somewhat from drudgery and be given a chance to deal a little more with "ideas" rather than with "things."

Are dishwashing, laundry work, scrubbing, cleaning, sewing and cooking spiritual tasks? If so, we wonder just what material drudgery would be.

Does not Dr. Abbott realize that nine-tenths of the married women of America do their own housework? Does he not know that the great bulk of all the laundry work is done by women, either in homes or in laundries?

Just what nonsense is it, then, that talks of the danger that women may cease to deal with "ideas" and "spiritual tasks" and enter upon the world's drudgery with man?

Certainly marking a ballot once a year, with an occasional primary, is scarcely so arduous a form of material drudgery as scrubbing floors or bending over a washboard.

In fact, the imagination finds itself quite helpless in trying to picture any of the newer activities of women which can compare in "material drudgery" with that which has from time immemorial been the heritage of the "weaker sex."

We certainly trust that whatever changes the future may reveal there may be among them developments which will relieve both men and women from much of the drudgery of the past and present. Then there will be more opportunity for gentler and more spiritual interests, both in the home and in society.—Denver News.

IN MAN'S OWN INTEREST.

How Woman Suffrage Will Improve the Condition of Both Sexes.

When Miss Susan B. Anthony with her brave associates began over fifty years ago a systematic agitation for woman's enfranchisement the plea was in behalf of a suppressed and submerged sex. Woman's capabilities were undeveloped, her powers untested, her social and economic rights not so much denied as ignored. They rightly asked for suffrage for woman's sake.

Now the tables have been turned; woman "has the floor" quite as much as if not more than man; she is heard on the civic, economical, social and ethical problems of the day more often than man, and she brings to the discussion of these questions perhaps a better trained mind and certainly a more careful immediate preparation than man. And now the most forceful plea for the enfranchisement of women is in the interest of men, or, rather, in the interest of the community. Then the woman needed the ballot for her development; now the state needs the woman's ballot by virtue of her development. The state is in dire need of more culture, more refinement, more grace, more conscience at the polls.

It is because we believe woman is prepared to make such contribution that we rejoice in the evergrowing claim of men and women who are marching forward to victory under the banner of equal suffrage to men and women. Whatver safeguards and restrictions it is necessary to throw around the ballot box they are not such as can be emphasized by a sex line, a sect line or a race line.—Jenkin Lloyd Jones, D. D., in "Unity."

BROWN THE FASHION.

The Onion Shade Decidedly Smart. A Stunning Frock.

Brown in all shades is the fashionable color of the season, but when of the onion tinge—that is, a brown composed of a mingling of creams with a suspicion of pink—it is considered ultra smart.

The stunning frock illustrated is of this onion color in a rich panne cloth.

FROCK OF ONION BROWN.

The skirt is made with a two center box plait and is double box plaited all about a deep side yoke.

The full three-quarter sleeves are ornamented with a tab trimming on the outside and lace peeps from under the shaped cuffs.

The bodice is trimmed with brown silk braid in disk design.

The Bird's Superior Eye.

The sight of birds is extraordinary, and the simple fact that the eye of a hawk and a pigeon is larger than their whole brain gives some idea of what their powers of sight must be and of how easily they can fly hundreds of miles if they have marks to guide them. Very little attention has yet been given by eye surgeons to the eye of the bird and other animals, from which so much is to be learned.—London Mail.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

On the eve of another Thanksgiving Day we review the many mercies vouchsafed us by a benignant Providence during the past twelve months, and we must feel that it is a privilege to pause in the hurry of life to thank the giver of all good for His manifestations of great love.

As a nation, we have been blessed beyond all other nations of the earth. The harvests have been ample and the markets of the world open to receive our surplus. Wages are higher in the United States than in any other country, and higher at present than ever before. No industrial or financial convulsion has or will rack the country as a result of the presidential election, and the outlook for continued peace and prosperity is [illegible].

This community has been granted health, success and happiness during the year past, and our gratitude should be boundless for the unstinted favors shown. As individuals, our benefits [illegible] to have ob[illegible] save that of [illegible].

THE work of improving the Oswego, Erie and Champlain Canals, which will begin at a cost of $101,000,000, will give employment to thousands of men, besides providing for the future vast transportation business of the great Empire State. It is estimated that at least $1,600,000 of the foregoing amount will be spent in the immediate vicinity of Fulton on Contracts Nos. 1 and 2. It will practically double the water-power for factory purposes and will turn the river into a lake twelve feet deep, from the upper bridge to within a half-mile of the Minetto dam. A great deal of the shipping from the lakes to the seaboard will pass through Fulton, and the benefits to be derived are incalculable.

THE Republicans of North Carolina are hopeful that they will be enabled to take their State out of the "solid South" column two years from now. At the last election they reduced the Democratic majority some 35,000. If this operation is repeated the old North State will again come into the Union.

SENATOR PROCTOR, of Vermont, as all who know him will agree, is a very kind, benevolent and grandfatherly sort of man. He thinks well of old school teachers who have been poorly paid and had the misfortune to outlive their usefulness. To make them comfortable the rest of their days he has given them his house in Rutland, Vt., and with it a purse of $10,000. The Senator is very wealthy and can well afford to be generous.

MR. JAMES BRYCE, author of "The American Commonwealth," which he says he wrote for the purpose of carrying the light into dark places, recently told a New York audience that "No people on the globe have so great a right to be optimistic as you Americans." And then he went down the [illegible] the day after Presidential [illegible], and saw a fleet of six ships [illegible] come in with 6,134 immi[illegible] board. They, too, are op[illegible] regarding the future of [illegible]

These would be very acceptable Christmas gifts and souvenirs. The price is most reasonable. For sale at Morrill Brothers' printing establishment.

The ladies of Zion Episcopal church will hold a handkerchief, apron and candy sale in the City hall on Saturday afternoon and evening, Nov. 26. At six o'clock a chicken pie dinner will be served as only the ladies of Zion church know how to serve it.

Several departments in the Hunter Arms factory are working until 9 o'clock each night. New hands are being taken on in many departments and orders continue to come to the proprietors. Hunters want the L. C. Smith gun, and "they won't be happy till they get it."

On Friday evening, Dec. 2, the employes of the Hunter Arms company and the volunteer fire department will give a benefit party in Church's hall for Messrs. Joseph Lynch and Frank Martin, who have been ill for some time. The cause is a worthy one and the party will be most enjoyable, insuring a large attendance.

Dr. C. R. Lee, Mrs. W. S. Royce and Miss Elizabeth Lee have presented the City hospital with an aseptic instrument cabinet, in memory of their father, the late Dr. C. M. Lee. The cabinet is the handsomest that could be secured and adds materially to the hospital, from a useful as well as an ornamental standpoint.

The G. A. R. and W. R. C. Fair held last week was well attended and heartily enjoyed. The programs rendered each evening were pleasing features and the articles on sale found ready purchasers. The patrons holding the lucky numbers which drew the articles contributed by merchants and others, were especially pleased, as they were of unusual value. The societies are enriched by their efforts to the amount of $300.00 which will be devoted to the care of veterans and their families.

The Universalist ladies on Wednesday evening tendered Mrs. Fred Warner a farewell social at the studio of Mr. F. M. Darrow, and presented her with a handsome set of teaspoons as a token of regret that she and her children would leave on Saturday evening to make their future home in California, where Mr. Warner has a desirable position. A large number of friends attended the social and a most enjoyable evening was spent. The Tilden brothers were among the guests and they furnished delightful music with violin, horn and piano. Refreshments were served.

Baggs, both well known in Fulton where they have many friends. The Rev. S D. Robinson will be the officiating clergyman. The bride will wear her going-away-gown of blue cloth, tailor made, with handsome white silk waist.

On Thursday evening Mrs. Ida Walker entertained her employees and a few other friends in a novel and enjoyable manner at her home in Cayuga street. In the game of "Pens" Mrs. Hulett secured first prize and in the advertising game Miss Bessie Flagg was the successful contestant. After refreshments, the guests were served with "dates", Mrs. Walker's date announcing the coming marriage of Miss Ella Klein and Mr. Horace Baggs.

Postmaster Frank M. Preston violently sneezed on Wednesday afternoon while in the west side post office, and burst a blood vessel in his head. A violent hemorrhage followed which so weakened him that he was obliged to summon medical assistance. Dr. Huffman was called and succeeded in stopping the flow of blood after an hour's labor. Mr. Preston was then removed to his home where he is now out of danger. It was a very narrow escape for him.

Proposed Choral Society.

Last Wednesday a few of the musical people of the city met for discussion as to the possibility of organizing a musical society for the purpose of studying "The Messiah" or some similar composition under the leadership of a competent conductor.

Rev. A. H. Grant was made chairman of the meeting, and he appointed a committee to make a report at the next meeting, when permanent organization would be effected if deemed advisable by those present. Such a meeting will be held in the parlors of the Presbyterian Church on Wednesday evening, Nov. 30, at 7:45 o'clock.

All of the people of the city who are interested in music are invited and urged to attend this meeting, and this newspaper notice may be considered as a personal invitation. The rendition of such a work as "The Messiah" will call for all of Fulton's vocal talent, and this will need to be supplemented by an orchestra.

ALWAYS count noses just before you carve the turkey, and don't forget to include your own proboscis.

If you invite your relatives to dine with you on Thanksgiving, it is wise to help them to turkey first. They have probably skipped one or two meals to be in shape for the feast and are hungry enough to start a riot.

Don't invite your mother-in-law to a Thanksgiving dinner and carve the turkey in such a way that it will fly off the platter and strike her in the face. A Wisconsin man tried that trick last year, and the old lady caught the turkey and took it home and devoured it.

THE OLD LADY TOOK IT HOME.

If the bird is particularly tough and you have difficulty in carving it, don't get angry if some one yells, "Take an ax!" Mark that person and see that the least desirable portions of the fowl go on his plate.

Don't heave a sigh of relief and think the worst is over when you have at last helped everybody to turkey. You'll just about sit down to eat the juicy portions you have laid aside for yourself when the plates will begin to come back again.

In carving a very tough turkey stand back from the table as far as possible. This will give you a better chance to escape from the house in case the carving knife slips and the diners are covered with hot gravy.

If you are invited out to Thanksgiving dinner and think you will be asked to carve the turkey it would be well to wear a coat of mail, get a permit from the police to carry a revolver and practice running for a couple of weeks.

It is well to start some lively discussion among those at the table when you are about to carve. This will draw attention from you, and no one may notice that your knees are wabbling and your lips moving in prayer.

If by any chance the turkey slips from under your carving knife and he deposited in some one's lap, do not join in the laugh that will follow. Remember you will have troubles of your own when the guests depart and you are left alone with your wife to face the music.

Don't glare at your wife and create a scene if the turkey is cast iron and puncture proof. In that case it may be cooked over the next day and you will save on the butcher's bill.

Last, but not least, don't take it out of the children if you happen to break a five dollar meat platter in carving a two dollar turkey. It is the dog's fault, of course, and he should be kicked all over the dining room.

THANKSGIVING DAY AMONG INDIANS

The Indians of the southwest have accepted Thanksgiving day along with other customs of their white neighbors, though they have adapted it to their savage ideals until it bears little resemblance to the festival instituted by the pilgrim fathers. The government agents on the reservations of Oklahoma and Indian Territory have in recent years fixed upon Thanksgiving day as the date for the great beef issues and the payment of annuities, and their ruddy wards are in consequence provided not only with good cause for thankfulness, but with the wherewithal to demonstrate their gratitude to the Great Spirit in the conventional manner.

HUNDREDS OF INDIANS ARE DANCING AND MAKING MERRY.

[illegible] at the gathering place waiting for the moment when the agent shall let loose upon the herds grazing on the hillside the bands of painted warriors. Medicine men are holding executive sessions, and the squaws and children are running races in their glee. Hundreds of Indians are dancing and making merry. When the word is given for the beginning of the chase a wild, weird chanting runs throughout the camp. Suddenly from their lodges burst forth the young men, clad in gay trappings and armed with long shining rifles. Off to the herd they dash; the crack of a gun is heard, and the bellowing of the cattle, the fierce shouting of the hunter and the fusillade of rifle shots make one believe that a battle is in progress. Half an hour or more the chase is kept up, while the wildest excitement prevails in the camp. Squaws are sharpening long knives and the medicine men are chanting invocations for the success of the hunters. Then the warriors come riding back in a long column, dragging the beeves as trophies behind them, singing the buffalo song.

The squaws skin and dress the beef, the medicine men invoke the blessing of Manitou, and the Indians rush to the carcasses and eat their fill.

What Thanksgiving Means.

THANKSGIVING means a lot of things!
Upon the farm when we were boys—
Still memory about it sings
And accents all its olden joys.
How many things are brought to mind—
From turkey fit for kingly feast
To pies of every sort and kind,
From mince to pumpkin, nicely creased

AND who were there? Who were not, say,
From grandpa to the youngest boy?
It seemed just no Thanksgiving day
If one were absent from the joy.
It was a feeling next to that Religion twines around the soul;
That one must have a homelike chat
This day, else it had missed its goal.

GOD bless the old Thanksgiving days
Upon the farm when we were boys!
For memory about them plays
As round naught else of modern joys.
From other days they stand aloof,
As holier ones forever may,
And [illegible] in our behoof

WRONGS DONE TO WOMEN.

Their Blight, and Curse Have Followed Man Through the Ages.

The late John P. Altgeld in a book just published, "The Cost of Something For Nothing," states in the chapter "Wrong Done to Women":

"The conditions necessary to reach the highest development in this world for either man or woman are independence and absolute equality of rights. This is the essence of justice, and the highest civilization is impossible where these conditions do not exist. Neither man nor woman can become really great while the other is kept subordinate. And the different peoples of the earth rank on the scale of progress according to the treatment their women receive.

"Their condition is the lowest among the savages and barbarians, where they are compelled to do all the drudgery and to wait on their lords and masters as slaves, and it is the highest in the United States of America, where they possess the greatest degree of independence and equality of rights ever accorded women.

"Men are gradually discovering that they cannot deprive women of equal rights without suffering themselves. They pay the penalty of occupying a lower grade of civilization. The man who treats a woman as an inferior and refuses to accord her justice cannot attain the highest estate in this life. He stands on too low a plane.

"There is no man living who holds a commission which authorizes him to sit in judgment on the rights of women.

"Woman has precisely the same title and right to independence and equality before the law that man has. Both hold title from the same source. She has just as much right to sit in judgment on man and limit his sphere and his actions as he has to limit hers. Therefore any attempt by man to deny woman independence or equality of rights is simply the assertion of brute force.

"Brute force degrades those who successfully use it. Every time it is resorted to there is a reaction toward the brute creation.

"The story of the wrongs done to woman is as old as time, and the blight and curse of it have followed man through the centuries."

NOT INFERIOR TO MEN.

Women Should Have Opportunity of Demonstrating Their Equality.

We talk about the inferiority of the woman's mind as compared with man's; that she is not capable of thinking and reasoning and reaching logical conclusions. If she is not, then she is just what the present system and the systems of the past have made her. If her intellect has been curbed so that she could not use it how can we expect strength of mind? It is only through the use of the mind that it becomes strong, and the more women learn to use their minds the greater their mental strength will be. Parents should therefore see to it that every girl in the family has abundant opportunity to develop her own latent power, to give it practical expression in the world, so that she can feel that she is a real necessity in the world, that she is no more dependent on others than others are dependent on her. She must bring to life the spirit of independence and self reliance wherein she is not afraid to think and to act for herself. There will be fewer false marriages, fewer broken hearts, fewer ruined lives, when the same self reliance enters into the woman's life that is now to be found in the life of man. She will follow the dictates of her heart rather than the dictates of convenience, as too often occurs when entering into the marriage state.

Some may think it will take away from the chivalry of life. Better that it should do so than that men should lose respect for women. In the most flowery days of chivalry there was not the same degree of respect for women as there is at the present time, when she is showing herself to be the equal of man in many avenues of life. Idle sentiment that brings no good with it is of little use to any one.—Charles Brodie Patterson, Editor Mind.

AN OBJECTIONABLE LAW.

One That Should Be Vigorously Combated by Friends of Women.

A leading Denver daily quotes the paragraph of the proposed statehood bill to which women object and says, "The best way to defeat this section is to elect only members of congress who are opposed to it." It proudly adds that the nominees of its party "have stated absolutely that they will oppose this section and speak against it on the floor of the house. They are men who do not pillory their women constituents between convicts and lunatics. Their frank and manly stand entitles them to the vote of every self respecting woman voter in their respective districts and in the state."

What a difference there is between the consideration accorded to women in the states where they have votes and in those where they have none! In the four equal suffrage states probably almost all the nominees for congress, upon whatever ticket, would readily pledge themselves to speak and vote against this discreditable section in the pending bill. In the other states, so far as we have seen, the attitude of candidates on this subject has not been considered worth putting [illegible]

An Australian View of Us.

"When I get back to Australia," said a resident of Melbourne, "I shall tell my friends when they set off for a tour of the United States that they can cut out almost every other town and make Washington the Mecca of their pilgrimage. I am not saying this by way of tossing a superfluous bouquet at the national capital, for local pride does not require the encomiums of a transient visitor.

"I came here intending to stay perhaps forty-eight hours, but after a week's sojourn I'd like to linger indefinitely. I count the time I spent in New York and Chicago as almost wasted, especially Chicago. There's a town I would not call home even if they were to offer me their entire collection of skyscrapers as a condition of residence. But Washington is different. Here you have pure air, skies that rival those of Italy, the finest streets of any city in the world and, last, but not the least, a population that does not seem possessed of the idea that the pursuit of wealth is the only thing worth while."—Washington Post.

Adam's Stolen Rib.

In one of the many and varied comments on the creation of women in the Talmud the Emperor Hadrian is introduced as conversing with Rabbi Gamaliel on several religious questions. With the object of casting ridicule on the Bible, Hadrian exclaims: "Why, your God is represented therein as a thief! He surprised Adam in his sleep and robbed him of one of his ribs!"

The rabbi's daughter, who was present, craves permission to reply to the emperor. This is granted her. "But first let me implore thy imperial protection, puissant sire!" she exclaims. "A grave outrage has been perpetrated on our house." "Who has dared to inflict any harm on the abode of a friend?" asked the sovereign.

"Under cover of the night an audacious thief broke into our house, took a silver flagon from our closet and left a golden one in its stead." "What a welcome thief!" cries Hadrian. "Would that such robbers might visit my palace every day!" "And was not the Creator even such a thief as this," archly rejoins the blushing damsel, "who deprived Adam of a rib and in [illegible] gave him a loving, lovely [illegible]

Charitable Doctors.

Doctors give away more than any other class of men on earth. It is stated that the gratuitous services of physicians last year to one large Philadelphia hospital amounted to over $500,000 at ordinary fees. Upon this the Wisconsin Medical Recorder remarks that "if any individual or any society had given $500,000 to any cause the fact would have appeared in all the dailies with large headlines, but this free work of the physicians has come to be considered as too common for notice.

"And this was only one hospital in one city. How enormous this free work in the whole country must have been last year!"

Mothers Praise It.

Mothers everywhere praise One Minute Cough Cure for the sufferings it has relieved and the lives of their little ones it has saved. A certain cure for coughs, croup and whooping cough. A. L. Spafford, Postmaster, of Chester, Mich., says: "Our little girl was unconscious from strangulation during a sudden and terrible attack of croup. One Minute Cough Cure relieved and cured her and I cannot praise it too highly." One Minute Cough Cure relieves coughs, makes breathing easy, cuts out phlegm, draws out inflammation and removes every cause of a cough and strain on lungs. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Life.

"I'd like to show you a copy of the work I'm selling," said the agent. "It is something that interests every human being, 'How to Live a Hundred Years.'"

"I've no use for it," said Gayboy, "unless it tells how to live a hundred years in ten years."—Chicago Tribune.

A Difficult Task.

"Jack, dear, I do wish you would get another photo taken."

"How often have I told you I will not?"

"But why not?" Then thoughtfully after a pause, "Are you afraid of being asked to look pleasant?"—Punch.

A Good Complexion.

"Sparkling eyes and rosy cheeks restored by using DeWitt's Little Early Risers," so writes S. P. Moore, of Nacogdoches, Texas. A certain cure for billiousness, constipation, etc. Small pill—easy to take—easy to act. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Looking Ahead.

The Senior Partner—I don't see how you can charge the money you've spent on that impecunious young fellow up as business expense. The Young Lawyer—That's simple enough. He has a rich uncle that is sick, and there's going to be a lovely contest over his will.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

Emerson on the Sea.

On the seashore the play of the Atlantic with the coast! What wealth is here! Every wave is a fortune. One thinks of Etzlers and great projectors who will yet turn all this waste strength to account. What strength and fecundity, from the sea monsters, hugest of animals, to the primary forms of which it is the immense cradle, and the phosphorescent infusories; it is one vast rolling bed of life, and every sparkle is a fish. What freedom and grace with all this might! The seeing so excellent a spectacle is a certificate to the mind that all imaginable good shall yet be realized. The sea is the chemist that dissolves the mountain and the rock, pulverizes old continents and builds new, forever redistributing the solid matter of the globe, and performs an analagous office in perpetual new transplanting of the races of men over the surface, the exodus of nations. We may well yield us for a time to its lessons. But the nomad instinct, as I said, persists to drive us to fresh fields and pastures new. Indeed the variety of our moods has an answering variety in the face of the world, and the sea drives us back to the hills.—Ralph Waldo Emerson in Atlantic.

While There is Life There is Hope.

I was afflicted with catarrh; could neither taste nor smell and could hear but little. Ely's Cream Balm cured it.—Marcus G. Shutz, Rahway, N. J.

Cream Balm reached me safely and the effect is surprising. My son says the first application gave decided relief. Respectfully, Mrs. Franklin Freeman, Dover, N. H.

The Balm does not irritate nor cause sneezing. Sold by druggists at 50 cents or mailed by Ely Brothers, 56 Warren street, New York.

Diet For Consumptives.

You have to eat at a sanitarium for consumptives, hungry or not. There are no big gorges to overwork the stomach, but there are six meals a day of moderate size. Some patients can eat full meals and then swallow thirty-six raw eggs a day. The aim of the treatment in these sanitaria is to get the sick man to drink three quarts of milk and eat a dozen raw eggs a day in addition to his regular meals of simple food.

And you must eat meat and plenty of it. Don't cut the fat off. The cow got most of the good out of the lean in her lifetime. The fat is what will do you good. All that there is to cod liver oil that makes it worth while is that it is a fat easy to assimilate. Bacon fat is nearly as easy to digest and about 500 times as easy to take.

Fruits and salads you may eat merely to amuse yourself and pass the time. But you are wasting stomach room on them. Milk, eggs, meat and hard breads for you if you are to get well. Not a great deal at a time, but often.—Everybody's Magazine.

Like a Comet in the sky comes the star of health to the weak and weary despondent dyspeptic, curing all stomach troubles and digestive disorders.

This famous remedy does for the stomach that which it is unable to do for itself, even if but slightly disordered or overburdened.

Kodol supplies the natural juices of digestion and does the work of the stomach, relaxing the nervous tension, while the inflamed muscles and membranes of that organ are allowed to rest and heal. It cures indigestion, flatulence, palpitation of the heart, nervous dyspepsia and all stomach troubles by cleansing, purifying and strengthening the glands, membranes of the stomach and digestive organs.

The Rural Free Delivery.

[From the Philadelphia Press.]

As a matter of fact, President Cleveland in his messages actually opposed rural free delivery. Nevertheless congress made a small appropriation of $10,000 to test the feasibility of establishing a system of free mail delivery in rural districts. But Cleveland's postmaster general, Mr. Bissell, refused to apply it or make the attempt. The appropriation was renewed, and Mr. Bissell's successor, Postmaster General William L. Wilson, also refused to use it.

It was not until President McKinley's administration that any practical attempt was made to organize rural free delivery, and then the movement was taken up so thoroughly, efficiently and faithfully that while he was president about 8,000 rural delivery routes were established and the system was created and made as permanent a part of the postal service as free city delivery. There are now more than 20,000 routes in operation, and the whole work from the beginning has been done under Republican administration.

A Heavy Load.

To lift that load off of the stomach take Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It digests what you eat. Sour stomach, belching, gas on stomach and all disorders of the stomach that are curable, are instantly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. S. P. Storrs, a druggist at 297 Maine street, New Britain, Conn., says: "Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is giving such universal satisfaction and is so surely becoming the positive relief and subsequent cure for this distressing ailment, I feel that I am always sure to satisfy and gratify my customers by recommending it to them. I write this to show how well the remedy is spoken of here." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure was discovered after years of scientific experiments and will positively cure all stomach troubles. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

The Next Senator.

The question of the succession to Mr Depew in the senatorship from New York is one that will be settled, of course, by the victorious Republican party. Mr. Odell, whose name has been often mentioned in connection with the office, will not, it is now said, be a candidate.

Senator Depew has ably represented the state at Washington. He has a thorough knowledge and long experience of public affairs, a rare gift of eloquence, a wide acquaintance with the leading men of his own and other countries and a very genuine and creditable popularity. As a Republican senator is assured, a majority of the people of New York would, we believe, be very glad to have Mr. Depew re-elected.—New York World, Nov. 11, 1904.

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

New Way of Using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Mr. Arthur Chapman, writing from Durban, Natal, South Africa, says: "As a proof that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a cure suitable for old and young, I pen you the following: A neighbor of mine had a child just over two months old. It had a very bad cough and the parents did not know what to give it. I suggested that if they would get a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and put some upon the dummy teat the baby was sucking it would no doubt cure the child. This they did and brought about a quick relief and cured the baby." This remedy is for sale by H. C. Giesler.

The Head of the Family.

"It has come to my ears that you are calling me 'the governor,'" said the old man sternly. "Are you?"

"I might as well admit it," said the young man contritely.

"You ought," continued the old gentleman, "you ought to have more respect for your mother."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Secret of Admiration.

"I have a great admiration for the Moors," declared Miss Elderly.

"I think I can tell why," from her best chum. "Their women never celebrate a birthday and make it a point of honor not to tell their ages."—Detroit Free Press.

Parlor Car Service.

Parlor cars are now being operated between Massena Springs and Syracuse on trains leaving Massena Springs 6:20 a. m. and 10:55 a. m., and leaving Syracuse 1:15 p. m. and 6:33 p. m.

If you are an amateur photographer and have a negative of some friend whom you would like to see locked up for a long term, put your printing frame just inside a wire mosquito netting when you print the next picture from the negative. The result will be a print showing your friend behind the bars. The effect will be almost startling.

"Dixie."

No other song has ever touched the hearts of all the people of this land as "Dixie" touches them. During the war "John Brown's Body" swept the heartstrings of the north and their brave "boys in blue." The war has passed and the song is passing, is already much of a memory. But "Dixie" is more vibrant with life today than it was when it cheered the lean and hungry legions that were battling for the "lost cause." It has not only survived the war, but since then it has conquered the conquerors and echoes in the hearts of those that loved the blue as in the hearts of those that loved the gray. It has the magic of the "Marseillaise" in it. But it is without its clarion call that excited the red blood of strife. It is gay, sweet, serene, indefatigable. It may not be great music, but it has the quality of all that counts in this world—survival—and it is one of those ballads of a nation that the very wise man reckoned as more powerful than laws.—Indianapolis News.

Between the Horns of a Dilemma.

He was walking to and fro on the station platform, and his anxiety was so marked that a friend inquired:

"What's the matter, Tibbs? You look as if you had something serious on your mind."

"I have," he replied. "I'm worried; badly worried. I've just found a dollar in my trousers pocket."

"You're the first man I ever saw that worried over finding money he didn't know he had."

"But you don't understand. I can't make up my mind whether I forgot the dollar or whether my wife slipped it in my pocket to try me. You see, she has been accusing me of keeping things from her. Now, if I were to blow this bill in without saying anything to her about it and it should turn out that she had played a trick on me my finish would be worth writing up. On the other hand, if I go to her and confess that I found it she'll simply take the dollar. I haven't been so worried in a month."—New York Press.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is Pleasant to Take.

The finest quality of granulated loaf sugar is used in the manufacture of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and the roots used in its preparation give it flavor similar to maple syrup, making it quite pleasant to take. Mr. W. L. Roderick, of Poolesville, Md., in speaking of this remedy, says: "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy with my children for several years and can truthfully say it is the best preparation of the kind I know of. The children like to take it and it has no injurious after effect. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

Might Have Been Worse.

Biggs—Castleton was out driving with the Widow Grasper the other day, when the horse ran away with him, and he's laid up in the hospital. Griggs—Well, it might have been worse; the widow might have run away with him.

A Mistake.

"It's a mistake to marry too young," remarked the wise guy.

Wild Dogs of Africa.

Of the wild dog of central Africa an explorer writes: "The wild dog is common enough. He is an ugly looking beast, with a pied body, coarse hair, short head and large, upright ears. These wild dogs play fearful havoc with game, occasionally clearing out whole districts precisely in the same manner as the red dhole of India, before which even the tiger is said to retreat. They have a wonderful power of scent, wonderful boldness, endurance and pertinacity, and their loose, easy gallop covers the ground far more quickly than it appears to do. They usually hunt in considerable packs, although I have sometimes met them in threes and fours. I have never heard of wild dogs actually attacking man, but they often behave as if on the point of doing so, and unarmed travelers have been literally treed by them before now."

Soda and Magnesia Lakes.

The soda and magnesia lakes of Wyoming are estimated to cover an area of 1,028 acres. They are found in Albany and Carbon counties and represent the beds of natural basins now nearly dry. The lakes containing sodium sulphate have an area of 708 acres, with an average depth of about five feet, which means a holding of 4,000,000 tons of soda.

Babies and Boots.

Gypsies carry their babies in old shawls slung over their shoulders and tied about the waist. North American Indians carry their babies on the backs of squaws—cradle and all. But the Eskimo women of Labrador carry their babies in their boots. These boots come up to the knee and are wide at the top, with a flap in front. In these the little brown babies live and are happy.

Established 1868. FULTON, OSWEGO COUNTY, N. Y., WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1904. Vol. 37. No. 29.

IN MEMORIAM.

Samuel Green, born in Canterbury, England, Feb. 22, 1832; died in Fulton, Nov. 26, 1904.

These simple facts would mean little to a stranger, but to the mind of every resident of Fulton they bring a feeling of profound grief—a sense of personal loss—that the great, generous heart has ceased to perform its functions, and the citizen who never wearied in well doing, who knew no fatigue when an unfortunate needed his assistance, has been called to the reward which he so earnestly prayed might come to each and every man, woman and child in this city.

The deceased has been a resident of America since he was 21 years of age, and has resided in this city for 35 years. He was a starch-maker by trade and for several years he was foreman of the factory formerly located on Starch Island. In later years he took up the trade of paper-hanging, at which he worked until he became Superintendent of Charities, about four years ago. He served in the British navy for four years before removing to America, receiving an honorable discharge in 1852.

In 1854 Mr. Green was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Patrick in Oswego, and she was his helpmate indeed, until her health failed a year before her death, which occurred in January, 1902.

Mr. Green did a work in this city which will be a monument to his memory long after this generation has passed away. His best effort was expended where others had neither time, tact nor patience to persevere. As truant officer he was conscientious, and while he rigidly enforced the spirit and the letter of the law, he did not resort to law until every other means failed. As Humane officer, he was vigilant and thorough, and as pastor of Grace Mission chapel he was the most potent factor for good in this city. His religion was not bounded by creed and he reached the hearts of even the most hardened reprobate as [illegible] could.

The deceased was 72 years of age, and was very active until a few months ago. It was with great reluctance that he gradually gave up one duty at a time, until a week ago Saturday, when he became too ill to rise from his bed, pernicious anemia being the cause for death.

The deceased is survived by two daughters, Mrs. C. H. Metcalf of Groton and Miss Margaret Green, who has made her home with her father and has assisted him materially in his work for several years, and three sons, Messrs. James W., of this city, Charles F., of Syracuse and George V., of Amsterdam; also one brother, Mr. Caleb Green of Oswego, and four sisters, Mrs. Richard Fenner of London, Eng., Mrs. Charles Banks of Minetto, Mrs. G. W. Banks of Los Angeles, Cal., and Miss Ruth Green of Syracuse.

The funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock from the First M. E. Church, the Revs. John Richards and W. L. Sawtelle of this city and Demster M. Chase of Herkimer, officiating. Interment was made in the family lot in Mount Cemetery.

Prof. James Fairgrieve, in the following tribute to the deceased, expresses the man in words which need no interpretation:

The death of Samuel Green removes from the community a man whose loss will be deeply felt. A missionary in the truest sense of the word, and embued with the spirit of the Great Teacher, he carried on his work in Fulton and brought spiritual relief and comfort to hundreds of homes.

Grace Chapel, which he organized and personally supervised, while his health permitted, is a memorial of his great work as an evangelist.

As Commissioner of Charities, he always showed rare tact and judgment, and was a man to whom those in need or distress could come with absolute confidence. Blunt in speech but kind in heart, his interest and earnestness in his work always produced a feeling of security that this important branch of the city government was in safe hands. Sham and chicanery he easily detected and vigorously denounced, while he gave unsparingly of his time and strength to relieve the needy and worthy, studying carefully the conditions in each case and using rare discretion in ministering to their wants.

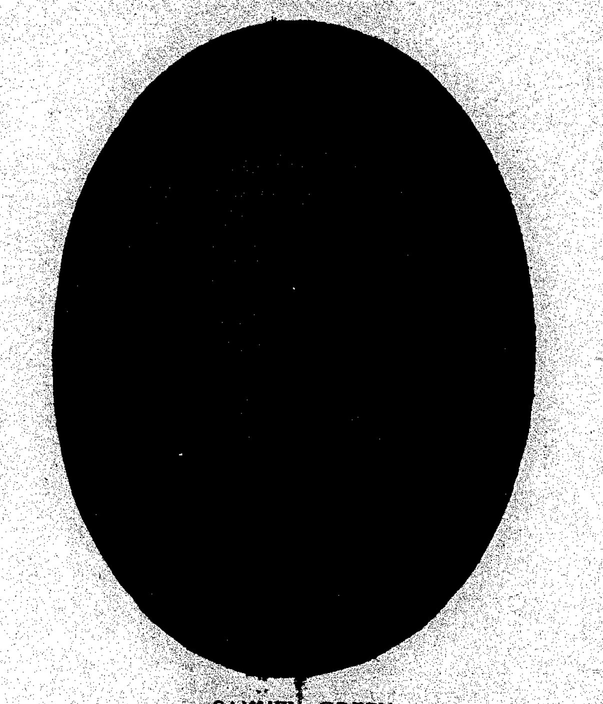
As school attendance officer, I became acquainted with Mr. Green and familiar with his many strong and excellent qualities. He understood home conditions of the children who needed attention at his hands and was patient and untiring in his efforts to have parents as well as pupils see that the school laws were formulated for their interests. He understood character building, and while it involved constant work, constant effort and constant struggle, he was prepared to give it. His effort always seemed guided by the principle that a boy should strive to do right because it was right, and scorn to do wrong because it was wrong. He served as a mediator between the parents and the school, thoroughly convinced that to correct evil tendencies in the young, the assistance and co-operation of the home and school were demanded.

He realized fully that waywardness, truancy and disregard of authority were too often not the fault of the boy, but a failure on the part of the parents to do their duty toward the child. He felt that no responsible father or mother would want their boy to contract the habit of cigarette smoking, swearing, drinking, licentiousness, deception and fraud; that the best way to improve a boy was to improve his environment and to add to his opportunity for good; but if other means failed and the law was necessary to accomplish this end, it should be enforced.

Mr. Green lived beyond the allotted three score years and ten, and yet we feel that he can hardly be spared from further usefulness in his particular sphere.

A void is left, but the remembrance of a life devoted to self-sacrificing acts [illegible] remains.

J. R. FAIRGRIEVE.



SAMUEL GREEN

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased the all-loving God in His wisdom, infinite but oft times incomprehensible, to remove from this life our honored and loved friend and co-worker, Samuel Green; and

Whereas, We feel that his life has been not only an example but an inspiration to higher and nobler living, and

Whereas, We feel that the place of this man of absolute integrity, of ready sympathy and sure help, of perfect justice tempered with the mercy of the Christ he served will long be vacant; be it

Resolved, That we, the Faculty of the Fulton Public Schools, sharing with the bereaved family their sorrow as with them we have loved him, and feeling that "he is not dead, this friend—not dead,

But in the path we mortals tread,
Got some few, trifling steps ahead
And nearer to the end
So that you, too, once past the bend,
Shall meet again, as face to face, this friend
You fancy dead," extend to them our sincere and heartfelt sympathy; furthermore, be it

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the local press and that a copy thereof be sent to the bereaved family.

Memorial Service.

A memorial service for the late Samuel Green will be held in the First M. E. church on Sunday evening. It will be a union service, all the denominational churches uniting, and it is hoped that there will be a large attendance. Addresses will be made by pastors and other citizens who are familiar with Mr. Green's work. An account will be given of his work for Grace Chapel and plans will be discussed for the continuance of the work. Appropriate music will be rendered.

A Story of Napoleon.

Napoleon invariably refused to remove his hat when he received kings and sovereign princes under the rank of emperor. He uncovered his head only in the presence of the emperors of Russia and of Austria. One day Napoleon received the king of Bavaria and of Saxony at St. Cloud. As the two kings removed their hats the emperor acknowledged their salutations by merely touching the brim of his cocked hat with his forefinger. He then drove with the two kings to Malmaison and, getting out of his carriage, casually remarked: "I am going to see the empress. Would you mind waiting for me?" The royal pair seemed to have been forgotten, for they sat in silent expectation for nearly an hour. Finally they noticed some of the imperial footmen playing cards. The king of Bavaria then laughingly remarked to the king of Saxony: "What a pity we haven't got a pack of cards. Since he treats us in this way we might at least follow the servants' example and pass the time playing picquet."—New York Tribune.

Bolivian Runners.

"Every one who has read the histories of the Incas," writes an Englishman, "has marveled at the tales of the native runners who were a feature in the civilization of that period. Some of this race of men still remain. When in Bolivia I have often had a telegram delivered at the station, forty miles away, and an answer received and brought back by the same man, all, including the journey of eighty miles, not occupying more than eighteen hours. The man was well content to receive two Bolivian dollars, or 75 cents in American money, for the service. I saw a man who delivered a message 200 miles away and brought an answer back, covering within six days and nights 400 miles. As he did this work for a native, his charge was five Bolivian dollars, about $1.87 American, out of which he provided his own food."

By Wire and Air.

An accidental experiment in the velocity of sound is recounted by a correspondent. He went to his telephone, and just as he put the receiver to his ear he heard the click of another telephone. Another receiver had been removed and the line was open.

Then he heard through the telephone the shriek of a locomotive whistle, and a few seconds later the sound came through the open window in the usual way. Looking up, he saw a locomotive half a mile away, passing the house of a friend.

The mystery was solved. The telephone that was open was that at the distant house, and the sound of the whistle had come through its transformation into an electric current quicker than it had traveled through the air.

Hornets as Fly Killers.

Hornets, or "white faced wasps," have no evil traits or obnoxious features. It is true that they will sometimes sting, but this is only when they are attacked in their own homes or think their young are in danger. The great value of these insects is that they live entirely upon insects, mostly flies, and, in fact, when they are near dwellings their food is generally the common horsefly. They are nature's greatest factors in reducing this serious pest. It is well known that flies carry disease germs, such as those of typhoid fever, and it can thus be seen that hornets have a decidedly sanitary effect as a result of their desirable insectivorous habits.—Field and Stream.

A Second Offense.

The tramp arrested for vagrancy rarely displays any humor, but a New York paper mentions one whose mild waggishness enlivened his own trial.

After the judge had looked the man over he said musingly, "I seem to know your face."

"Yes," the tramp agreed pleasantly; "we were boys together."

"Nonsense!" said the judge, frowning.

"But we were," the tramp said, with mild insistence. "We're about the same age. We must 'a' been boys together."

Peculiar Fact and Superstition.

In Painswick churchyard (between Stroud and Gloucester), in Gloucestershire, England, there are ninety-nine yew trees. Although the hundredth has been planted many times, it is a peculiar fact that it always dies. A local superstition says that "when the hundredth tree lives after it has been planted the world will come to an end."

No Deception.

Miss Goodart—I gave you that quarter because you said you hadn't had anything to eat since yesterday morning, and here I catch you going into a saloon. Weary Willie—Lady, I said I hadn't anything to eat, but I didn't say I wanted anything to eat, did I?—Philadelphia Ledger.

Crippled.

Tramp (piteously)—Please help a cripple, sir.

Kind Old Gent (handing him some money)—Bless me, why, of course! How are you crippled, my poor fellow?

Tramp (pocketing the money)—Financially crippled, sir.—Glasgow Times.

Selection of Breeding Swine

No two men will exactly agree as to what constitutes a perfect hog. Different men (men of equal ability) will pick out different hogs as the winners, says a correspondent of Western Swine Breeder. This is due to their different ideas as to type and perfection. Let us see what are the requirements of a perfect hog. They are size, bone, quality, color, markings, hair, head, ear, symmetry, style, beauty, evenness and a dozen smaller requirements. These are all but minor requirements in an ideal hog. The crucial test, and the one requirement in an ideal hog, is, Will he make the most pork out of the least amount of feed? All the former go to please the eye; the latter is to fill the pocketbook. If need be we could dispense with all the former, but the latter is the life of the business.

What I wish to impress upon the breeder is, do not forget the paramount object of the breed. It should be your duty to do all you can in selecting such stock as will make the most gain from the feed fed. Feed is high and will go higher as the years pass on. It will only be with the utmost care and closest selection that we will be able to raise the excellence of efficiency that has been attained in the last twenty-five years. We can scarcely hope to accomplish as much in the next twenty-five years. Still there is plenty of room left.

You may wonder what type I consider as the nearest perfect. It certainly can be no other than the medium hog. Extremes are always bad, be they in character, climate, weather or in stock. Extremes are bound to be unpopular. The short and shuffy hog may not waste much feed, but he is sluggish, weighs little and would exterminate the breed if continuously used for breeding purposes. The long, lean and gaunt hog, in my opinion, is a poor and wasteful feeder, requiring too long a time to market.

The Tamworth Pig.

Of all breeds introduced to this country the Tamworth most nearly resembles the primitive type of hog in length and narrowness of nose and head, length, depth and narrowness of body and lightness of hams, says Breeder's Gazette. Farmers of the corn belt look with no little degree of curiosity on these reminders of the primitive hog, of these suggestions of the "elm peelers" of the pioneer woods. But they find their place in the economy of porcine production. Widely at variance with improved type of the lard hog and with the modern form of the Berkshire, the Tamworths have succeeded in winning the high favor of the curers of bacon, as their length and depth of sides, their light waste, their large proportion of lean red meat to fat, make them very attractive to packers who make a specialty of bacon curing.

A TAMWORTH BOAR.

How to Detect Spavin.

When the buyer suspects that a spavin, large or small, is present, yet finds lameness absent, possibly due to continuous exercise or some preventive measure adopted for the occasion, he can speedily ascertain whether it is indeed present by a simple test. Have an assistant lead the horse out to halter and prepare to trot him instantly at the word "Go." Now lift up the foot of the suspected hind leg and hold it as close to the horse's belly as possible for a few minutes. Suddenly drop it and immediately trot the horse, when he will, for the first few steps or even rods, go intensely lame, but soon recover. This is an unfailing test and should be practiced in every case where there is the slightest suspicion of a spavin.—Dr. A. S. Alexander in National Stockman.

Wintering Sheep.

Good, comfortable, roomy sheds are a necessity where sheep are to be wintered. These need not be expensive, but should be well ventilated, free from drafts and situated on dry ground, says Wool Markets and Sheep. A large open yard, apart from that occupied by other animals, should be provided for exercise. Too much confinement in overwarm or ill ventilated stables is fatal to success with sheep. On the other hand, comfortable quarters, regular and liberal feeding, plenty of pure water and a sufficiency of salt will go far toward insuring their successful wintering and a strong crop of lambs in the spring.

Angora Crosses.

A great many goats that are termed Angoras are merely crosses of the Angoras on to the common goat, but these crosses are very good stock when they have been bred down to the fourth or fifth generation by constant use of pure bred bucks.—Wool Markets and Sheep.

Treatment For Enlarged Joint.

Blister the enlarged joint with red iodide mercury one part and lard four parts. Rub well in for fifteen minutes and tie the horse so it cannot bite the leg for a few days.—Farm and Ranch.

A Royal Consaw.

Peter the Great particularly delighted in drawing teeth, and he strictly enjoined his servants to send for him when anything of that sort was to be done. One day his favorite valet de chambre seemed very melancholy. The czar asked him what was the matter. "Oh, your majesty," said the man, "my wife is suffering the greatest agony from toothache, and she obstinately refuses to have the tooth taken out." "If that is all," said Peter, "we will soon cure it. Take me to her at once." When they arrived the woman declared that she was not suffering at all—there was nothing the matter with her. "That is the way she talks, your majesty," said the valet. "She is suffering tortures."

"Hold her head and hands," said the czar. "I will have it out in a moment." And he instantly pulled out the indicated tooth with great dexterity, amid profuse thanks from the husband. What was Peter's indignation to discover a little later that his valet had used him as an executioner to punish his wife, who had never had an unsound tooth in her head.

Old Time School Whipping.

Sir Sydney Waterlow, lord mayor of London, thus described to a London Express writer a "good, old fashioned thrashing" in school:

"My master at St. Saviour's grammar school, Southwark, at the foot of old London bridge, was a counterpart of the tyrant of Dotheboys Hall.

"Finding that at the age of ten years I had not made much progress in the proper comprehension of the four concords in Latin, he determined to give me a good birching. He was a most practiced hand with the rod and was never satisfied with a birch less than four or five feet long, with plenty of small, sharp cones on it. He never used the same one twice.

"The fiat having gone forth, I was stripped to my bare back and made to kneel. The master then inflicted three strokes as hard as his strong arm enabled him to give, causing the blood to spurt all over my back. Many of the cones remained in my flesh for days."

Varied Mourning Colors.

The following are the various colors used for mourning in different countries, together with the reasons given for the selection: Black expresses privation of light, worn throughout Europe and America; yellow, the sear and yellow leaf, Egypt and Burma; in Brittany widows' caps among the peasants are yellow; purple and violet, to express royalty, mourning for the cardinals and kings of France; violet is the mourning color for Turkey; white, emblem of "white handed hope," China; deep blue, Bokhara mourning; the significance of this selection is not known; pale brown, the withered leaves, Persia; grayish brown, earth, Ethiopia and Abyssinia.

Obeyed Orders Strictly.

The sentinels at Pompeii who died at their posts during the eruption because they had received no orders to leave them are held up as types of perfect obedience, but then the punishments in the Roman army were brutal, and they knew it. Different was the case of an individual who, being ordered to take a hot bath by his doctor, complied with the order and remained in it until the learned man paid his next visit. The doctor exclaimed when he heard, "Why, it is enough to kill you by parboiling or chill!" "It was all your fault," said the bather sulkily. "You only told me to get into a hot bath. You ought to have told me when to get out as well."

The Monks of Tibet.

A traveler in Tibet says that the peasant women of that country are cheery and, when washed, buxom and comely. The monks are the blot on the landscape. They bear no resemblance to the women of the country. One would think they belonged to a different type, and yet they are the sons and brothers of these women. The reason probably is the low, degraded life led by the ordinary monk, a life without interest, without work, devoid of any pursuit, intellectual or otherwise, and passed in the droning of chants and the performance of ritual, the meaning of which they neither know nor care about.

The Upper Amazon Basin.

The whole upper Amazon basin is subject to annual overflows which make it impossible to build homes on the rivers, as we are accustomed to do on our American rivers. There are only a few points in all the great stretch of river country that are above the flooding point, and these are commonly composed of rock or clay, quite unfit for cultivation.

City Visitor's Oversight.

Uncle Josh (after seeing urban guest take the train)—That feller may know a heap about city ettyket, but he wouldn't pass fer no Chestyfield in these parts. Uncle Lish—Wouldn't, hey? Uncle Josh—No, sir. W'y, he stayed with me three days an' never once proposed t' go out an' look at my hawgs.—Judge.

Her Hard Luck.

"I made an awful faux pas last night," said Mrs. Oldcastle.

"Did you?" replied her hostess. "I've been wantin' to make one for a long time, but I ain't been able to get a pattern. Whose did you have?"—Chicago Tribune.

Wholesale Rates.

Sammy (admiringly surveying his lately arrived twin sisters)—Did you get them cheaper by taking the two, papa?

Enthusiasts without capacity are the really dangerous people.—Schopenhauer.

HABITS OF THE HOG.

Give Him a Chance and He Is the Most Cleanly of Animals.

In an address before the Pennsylvania live stock breeders R. L. Munce said of the hog: Give the hog a chance, and he is the most cleanly of all the domestic animals. He is as sanitary in his habits as the most fastidious human being, and when he is the object of filth and squalor and made the subject of disease it is when man has so surrounded him that he has no choice in the matter.

The hog does not need expensive quarters to live and do well in. He can be accommodated more easily than any of our animals. He needs first access to pure air and water. These go hand in hand with good feed to make best returns. So long as he has a clean spot to eat in and a clean dry bed to sleep in, with the prevailing wind shut off so that it cannot blow directly on him, he will do well and make a profit. The rest of his surroundings he will keep in order if he has room.

Some think it absolutely necessary to have a place for the hog to wallow in. I do not. Even in the hottest weather shade and dry surroundings will keep him healthy and much more presentable. If the wallow is fed by a good live stream that flows in and out of the wallow all right, but if fed by only enough water to make a mudhole or mortar bed I look on it as a very dangerous place to allow hogs to go.

A hog will often start a wallow, especially in our tough limestone clay. He roots out a place in the earth to fit his body and probably get cool earth to lie in. Then the rains fill this up, and you have a real disease breeder or retainer and an unsightly spot on the farm. When we have such places we drain them out first and then fill up with earth and go after the chap that roots with the ringer.

Silage For Sheep.

The Maine station made both feeding and digestion experiments with soy beans and corn silage, says American Cultivator. The silage kept well, was readily eaten and was preferred by sheep to plain corn silage. It was found impossible to use one pound less of grain per cow per day when soy bean and corn silage were fed against corn silage.

In the feeding experiment with union grains it was found that they gave rather better results than the same weight of a mixture made up by weight one part cottonseed meal, one part linseed meal and two parts of wheat bran.

Feed Roughage First.

In feeding the horse do not first give the grain and then let the horse fill up on hay. Feed the hay or roughage first, then the grain. In this way more use is obtained of the grain, and it pleases the horse's appetite much better.—Cor. National Stockman.

TO BUYERS OF HOLIDAY GOODS.

The season that "comes but once a year," is only four weeks away, and The Times is going to make a special plea for mercy for clerks, merchants and shoppers, too, and it is for that purpose that this special edition has been issued. The stores advertised in this number are filled with good things for every kind of people—the assortment is larger than ever before and the prosperous year just closing bespeaks a heavy Holiday trade. There is not a man, woman, or child within the radius covered by this paper, who is financially unable to bestow some gifts upon friends, and The Times urges that purchasing be done at once. Every year the clerks and merchants are so overtaxed by late shoppers, that Christmas is far removed from being a happy day for them. The late shopper is jostled, she has a limited assortment to choose from and must stand, perhaps for hours, awaiting the clerks attention. Let us for the next two weeks, work the Golden Rule overtime, and see if the result is not the most satisfactory and enjoyable Christmas we have spent. Nothing warms the cockles of the heart like the consciousness of having done a good deed, and it will be conferring a great good upon a great number, if this plea is heeded. Buy the gifts now; make the fruit cake, plum pudding and nick-nacks later.

This means you. Your neighbor may be thoughtless or careless and if you delay shopping, you will be crowded together in the stores at the last moment.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

Important Happenings at Home and Abroad Discussed.

The Current Events Club met on Monday evening at the residence of the Hon. and Mrs. T. D. Lewis.

An interesting and instructive program had been arranged by the leaders, Messrs. John Hunter and W. E. Hughes.

After the preliminary business of the session was concluded, Chairman Redhead asked the leaders to assume charge of the meeting.

Attorney Arvin Rice was introduced by Mr. Hunter. Mr. Rice gave a comprehensive description of the Chicago subway, which is now used for the transportation of freight, twenty miles out of the sixty in contemplation having been completed.

Professor George Moore of the High School had given the domestic policy of Russia careful consideration. The recent agitation of the Zemstvo assemblies for a larger voice in legislative matters and the relationship that exists between the Czar and the several legislative bodies of the empire were treated in a most instructive manner. Every detail was thoroughly exemplified and the audience showed their appreciation of the speaker's efforts by vigorous applause at the close of his remarks.

The elimination of any obligatory subscription to the Westminster Confession of Faith by Union Theological Seminary of New York, was discussed by the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle. Mr. Sawtelle explained that no doctrinal statement had been substituted and declared that the seminary's obligations included the provision of instructors in the standards of the Presbyterian Church. The Briggs controversy some years ago caused a partial severance of the ties between the seminary and the Presbytery, and while this last movement means practical independence, it does not necessarily follow that there will be a severance of the relationship which exists with the church. The Westminster Confession will not be obligatory on the part of the instructors.

Mr. John Hunter gave an interesting description of a trip through the New York subway, and Mr. W. E. Hughes gathered up the "odds and ends" of important happenings of interest in State and nation.

The next meeting of the club will be held on Monday evening, Dec. 12, at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. W. L. Sawtelle. The leaders will be Messrs. G. S. Piper and F. D. Van Wagenen.

An Oft Repeated Tale.

Whew, Let me sit down. I am so excited I can hardly stand.

Whatever has happened to you? I am sure you were calm enough an hour ago.

Yes, I was on the verge of tears when we were making out our Christmas gift list and I was trying to see how I could make gifts to each member of the family and save enough from the small sum I had to expend, to buy Kate the dress and Johnny the pair of shoes that they must have at once, I went to O'Brien's, corner of First and Oneida streets, after the dress goods and he had just unpacked his Holiday goods. I never saw such an array, and all so sensible and desirable. Think of fur scarfs in Isabella, Sable, Russian and American Fox, with muffs to match, at all prices, from $3.95 to $35.00; the lovely Moriage ware in odd dishes, cups and saucers, plates, vases, etc., from 19 cents to as many dollars per piece; beautiful tourist coats in all the latest styles, shades and fabrics at $5.90, $7.95, $10 50, $12 50 and $15.00, worth twice those prices; Mr. O'Brien had just ordered his $12.50 rain coats marked at $7.90 for the Holiday trade, too.

I saw Waldorf shirt waists worth $3 marked $1.98; the same make of waists worth $1.25 marked 75 cents, and black taffeta silk waists that have sold all Fall at $4.50, marked at $2.95 for the next two weeks. With one of these waists and one of the stylish taffeta skirts I saw there, marked down from $6 to $4 45, a lady could be well enough dressed for any occasion.

They certainly are wonderful prices and I do not wonder at your excitement, but what else did you see?

Hundreds of things. My head is filed with big gifts at little prices. $6 rope portierres at $3.95; ruffled muslin curtain at 29 and 39 cents per pair; handsome blankets for bath robes at 98 cents to $4.95; white rose blankets from $2.98 to $7.95; sweaters for ladies at $1.98, sold everywhere for $3 50; knitted shawls worth $2 at 98 cents; dressing sacques at 50 cents, 75 cents and $1, tasty patterns too; fine silk umbrellas, $1.25, $1.98, $2.96, up to $9; handkerchiefs from a penny to the most expensive linen; fancy hosiery, in silk, wool and cotton; why, the four floors of that store are running over with things to make you crazy, they are so choice and so low priced.

I couldn't make up my mind whether to buy Kate a suit all made, or to buy the material and make it. I saw such stylish suits at such ridiculously low prices that I thought at first the clerk was joking. I left the coat and suit department without buying and in the dress goods department I saw such exquisite wool goods from 39 cents up, that I could hardly decide alone, so came home for you to go with me and help. They are selling black goods amazingly cheap too, yard wide black taffeta and peau de soie—wear guaranteed—at 98 cents a yard, and all wool black dress goods from 79 cents to $1.50 a yard. Come, put on your wraps and we will return to the O'Brien store and select gifts for all on our lists. We could not do so well at any other store. The stocks are new and complete and we won't have to hurry in our selecting if we go at once before the crowds hear the truth and commence to rush for their share of the bargains. I have figured it out, and we can do all our Christmas buying there and get nicer articles and at much less money than we had thought we would have to spend for cheap stuff.

DR. FENNER'S GOLDEN RELIEF will cure any pain, inside or out, in from 2 to 5 minutes Fire and Police Commissioners.

Mr. F. J. Towse has been chosen president of the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners. It is understood that Mr. Towse is very much in earnest in the matter of organizing a paid department. A meeting will be held this evening, for the transaction of routine business. There are some rumors afloat regarding the selection of a new chief of the department, but Mr. Harry Waugh, the present incumbent of that office, has passed a civil service examination and has proven a thoroughly capable official, it seems strange, therefore, that a change should be deemed necessary.

A Correction.

The Times inadvertently stated in the article regarding the anniversary of the establishment of the Public Library in this city, that Mr. Thomas Hunter succeeded Mr. H. E. Nichols as trustee. It should have said Mr. M. H. Brando, as Mr. Nichols was never a trustee of the library, although deeply interested in it.

Fair and Supper at the Universalist Church.

The second Wednesday of next month (Dec. 14) has been chosen by the Universalist ladies for a fair and supper in the parlors of their church. The fair will be open during the afternoon and evening. A bountiful supper will be served.

CELEBRATING THE VICTORY

Speech of Senator Chauncey M. Depew at the Buckwheat Breakfast Given by Senator and Mrs. Platt to Celebrate the Election of Roosevelt and Fairbanks and the Republican State Ticket, at the Ah-Wa-Ga House, Owego, N. Y., Nov. 15, 1904.

Our Host and Hostess, Ladies and Gentlemen—Originality and initiative are the evidences of youth. This Buckwheat Breakfast, celebrating the election of Roosevelt and Fairbanks and our state ticket, is the most original and unique of political events. It finds its suggestion and execution in the brain of our host. In bringing us here to the scene of his boyhood days, his start in life and his early triumphs he carries us back to first principles. It is the country boys, born and raised on the farm or in the village, who govern the country in the Cabinet, in Congress, in Gubernatorial chairs, in State Legislatures and in the mayoralty of great cities. Breakfasts of buckwheat cakes, pie, country sausage and mush and milk have given to their digestive machinery muscles of steel so tried and tempered as to defy the luxurious creations of French chefs, and a degenerate civilization has never impaired either their health or their appetites. They dine with and help bury generation after generation of city bred men and remain as active and vigorous as ever.

I said once to a well known and very successful soldier, "What is the essential element of victory for an army?" His answer was, "Plenty of beef and healthy stomachs."

The late Emory Storrs told me once a buckwheat cake story. This brilliant lawyer always succeeded in acquitting his man charged with murder and was retained all over the country. On this occasion court was held in a rural town in Arkansas. At breakfast the Judge and Storrs were sitting together and delighted with plates piled high with hot buckwheat cakes. The landlady stood behind her guests with a wide mouthed pitcher of New Orleans molasses. She said, "Judge, will you take a trickle or a dab?" The Judge said, "I am very fond of molasses, so I'll take a dab." Whereupon she put her hand in the pitcher and, gathering all it would hold, emptied the molasses on the Judge's cakes. Storrs' Chicago stomach could not stand that, so he said, "I'll take a trickle." Whereupon she dipped her fingers in the molasses pitcher and sprinkled the fluid on the lawyer's cakes. But in our civilization we have the glorious luxury of American crockery and American maple sirup.

Of all the aftermaths of my many campaigns this is pre-eminently the one for throwing bouquets. The audience loads the actors with them, the actors hurl them at each other, and before the footlights, as well as behind, there is a bower of roses. King David began life by playing the harp and then became King of Israel. Senator Platt began his political career by leading the Glee Club in the Fremont campaign of 1856, and, for twenty years as leader of his party in the Empire State, he has won both fame and affection. Martin Van Buren as a party leader was a factor in the destinies of the Republic. Thurlow Weed for thirty years accomplished results which no other political leader had ever been able to bring about. Senator Platt's twenty years of leadership will stand in our political history as unequaled for freedom from factional strife within the party and for glorious victories of the party.

We extend our congratulations to Governor Odell. His two administrations will compare favorably with the best the State has ever had. In the management of this campaign he has shown wisdom, tact and admirable generalship.

We cordially congratulate Governor Higgins. Fortunately the attacks made upon him were long enough before the election for the people of the State to see his honest face and learn of his magnificent equipment for their chief executive. He continued to rise in the estimation of his fellow citizens from the day he entered upon the platform until election night.

We are glad to have with us our successful candidate for Lieutenant Governor, Mr. Linn Bruce, whose eloquent voice did so much to bring about our victory. And to Mr. Mayer, the Attorney General, and all the others of the ticket we also present our felicitations.

You gentlemen of our Congressional delegation and of the Senate and the Assembly of our State are a part of the most remarkable and historical political triumph of our lives. Members of the Assembly are elected every year and Congressmen and Senators every two years, and ordinarily one election differs little from another. But the Congressmen, Senators and Assemblymen who this year receive their certificates and take their seats will in the evening of their days recount, like the veterans of Waterloo or Gettysburg, to admiring and breathless listeners in family circle and among the wise men of the town "that 1904 was the year when Roosevelt and I"—or, in the vernacular of politics, "me and Roosevelt"—"were elected."

And now, gentlemen, we come to our [illegible]. What elected Roosevelt? The [illegible] is as clear as revelation: Roosevelt elected Roosevelt. No personality [illegible] public life ever stood out [illegible] in individual characteristics [illegible] of traits peculiarly [illegible] confidences [illegible] President [illegible] his enemies caricatured or anathematized were the ones which endeared him to his countrymen. He holds his commission freer from pledges or obligations, except to the people, than any of his predecessors. The popular majority, rising nearly a million and a half above the high water mark of McKinley's vote, is his charter and guide for the next four years. But it is also an approval of the continuance of Republican policies and the maintenance of Republican principles. This election teaches the thoughtfulness and independence of the people. It is no accident which gives this phenomenal majority to Roosevelt; it is no accident which elects in Minnesota a Democratic Governor while giving a tremendous and unprecedented majority to Roosevelt; it is no accident by which a Democratic Governor is elected in Massachusetts by almost the same majority as Roosevelt receives; it is an admonition and a warning to the party in power. The new Governor of Massachusetts, in a State which has been Republican so long, will have an enormous patronage. I understand that the Democratic applicants who are by thousands preparing themselves to receive his favor are all limping with corns from wearing and breaking in the Douglas three dollar shoes.

Now, my friends, what of the future? If there was any criticism or blame because of the Philippines, we could claim that the treaty which acquired the islands was ratified by the votes of fifteen Democratic Senators. If there was any blame or criticism because of Panama, we could claim that the treaty with the young Republic was ratified by the votes of fifteen Democratic Senators. But for the next four years the responsibilities of the Government are wholly ours. There is happiness in the electorate more universal than ever before both among the victors and the vanquished. The workingman will retain his job and wages, the employer will have his factories running, his mills going, his furnaces in blast, his mines open, with a future rich in orders and market. The farmer will sell his harvests with satisfactory returns and pay off his mortgage or add to his capital. We lack a he lthy opposition and a vigorous and critical minority. Pride and arrogance in our victory will lead to our overthrow. We must be our own opposition, our own minority and our own critics. The Republican party stands for liberty and discussion, but we must avoid strife within the party and work together for the interests of the party as for the best interests of good government for the country and for our State. We must study the currents of popular opinion as never before and be alert, vigilant and wise in promoting policies which will continue prosperity. Upon the ruins or the disintegration of the Democratic party may arise an organization built up by able and resourceful agitators whose appeal will be to discontent. It must be our task to see that there shall be a minimum of discontent and a maximum of satisfaction and hope. We must take hold of questions of tariff and reciprocity with a firm hand. Recognizing what the protective system has done, is doing and must do for our country, we must remember that it is not a fetich, but its friends in their wisdom must adjust it from time to time to the needs of the hour.

The announcement by President Roosevelt that John Hay is to be Secretary of State for the next four years keeps our foreign policy upon the lofty plane which has secured for us the respect of all nations and done so much for the peace of the world and for the entrance of our products and people upon equal terms into the markets of the globe.

President Roosevelt's frank and statesmanlike utterance that he will not be a candidate for re-election clears the political skies in our domestic legislation and administration and gives to us a great President free to exercise an independent and courageous judgment for great policies, for progress and development at home and that ideal position in foreign affairs where, without entangling alliances, the United States is a factor to be consulted and heeded in the interests of humanity and civilization.

United States Senatorship.

Those who think that sentiment does not count in politics know nothing about sentiment and less than nothing about politics. The stupendous preponderance of votes for Mr. Roosevelt attests the power of sentiment. The recrudescence of William J. Bryan in what, we suppose, will continue to call itself the Democratic party attests the power of sentiment. And the general recurrence of the Republican politicians to the proposition to re-elect Senator Chauncey M. Depew attests the power of sentiment. The Eagle is advised that Mr. Odell is not adverse to it, that Mr. Platt is possessed by it and that President Roosevelt, who will have not a little to say about things Republican in his own state, will be quite pleased by it, though he is dictating "nothing and nobody."

Well, if Mr. Depew is to be re-elected, there are more than Republicans whom his re-election would please. It would please many Democrats. He belongs to one party, but he is liked by many in both. He prefers one party and opposes the other. But he has not been truculent, abusive or unfair in his allusions to opponents, while he has been cordial, earnest, ardent and industrious in his labors for the organization to which he belongs. Mr. Depew is a very able man, versatile, informed, energetic, tactful, ready and sunny. His humor, to which he is constitutionally and by overpractice too much addicted, has stood in the way at times of the appreciation of his solid abilities and of his large measure of knowledge. But in late years, and especially in the late sessions of the senate, he has done real work, hard work, able work and effective work, and he has "played" with his opportunities much less than his habit was in former days. This has added to the national appreciation of him and has renewed the better estimate of him in his own state, where it somewhat needed restoration.

We do not say he will be re-elected. We do unaffectedly say that the readers of the Eagle of both parties would be quite pleased should he be re-elected. We are neither prescribing nor suggesting him or any other Republican for the senate, for the legislators elect and the managers of the Republican party have been intrusted with the formation or execution of Republican action, and other people have been relieved of that function. The state of New York has in Mr. Depew a debater, a political student, an orator and a personality of whom both parties here are justly proud and against whom in neither party is there any malevolent feeling whatever. We think that those who are responsible for Republican action would do well to settle the senatorship question promptly, so as to leave to the party intrusted with affairs full time and a free hand to deal with other most urgent matters. A statement that Mr. Depew is to be re-elected, if such is the fact, should not be withheld. That fact accepted, public opinion would be able to urge on the attention of the party in power the consideration of subjects that need the best lights of knowledge and consultation, irrespective of party lines.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A New York Senator.

The election of a Republican legislature insures one fortunate result which will be welcomed with pleasure everywhere. Senator Depew has expressed no wish to succeed himself in the senate of the United States, but it is undoubtedly the desire of an overwhelming number that he should continue to represent this state in that body.

A few have made puns and jokes regarding Mr. Depew's stock of stories and have set in circulation the suspicion that they were not all of the vintage of 1900 and later. This is the tribute usually paid by those who cannot tell a story to those who can unfold an anecdote without getting so tangled up in it that the point is lost to view. But, beyond the unkind suggestion that a part of the senator's stories are printed in uncials and belong to a period not later than the fourth century, no one has ever uttered a word of doubt as to the fitness of Senator Depew to hold so eminent a position. His reputation has not suffered, although he has held positions which particularly exposed him to attack from jealous critics. Honorably and becomingly he has graced his calling as senator and as a participant in all the social and political events within the state and also beyond its borders. A worthy gentleman, he has been active in the support of the doctrines held by his party, and yet he is as much respected by those of the opposition as by his more intimate friends.

If this genial gentleman wishes to be made senator for another term there is no one to dispute his right. And no one could command a hearing if he wished to speak against the choice of a veteran so distinguished in the service of his country. If Mr. Depew says the word, that ought to settle the matter without debate or question.—Watertown (N. Y.) Standard.

Fish That Sing.

A species of fish known as the "singing shad" are often seen and heard along the Atlantic coast, especially in early spring and late in autumn. People of the Georgia and Florida coast declare that they come from the north, while those of Delaware bay and Long Island sound are equally certain that the little piscatorial oddity is a southern denizen. They go and come in vast schools and only emit their musical notes while traveling from place to place and then only when the wind ceases to blow and the waters become smooth and quiet. Persons who have heard the singing shad say that the noise it makes is one hard to imitate on paper, but that it is something like: Wee ho, he hi do de; we ho, de di dum.

The singing of a single representative of this musical species of fish is very weak, entirely too feeble to be heard above the ripple of the waves.

On the Bolivian coast there is a singing fish of large dimensions. Another makes his home in Japanese waters. In all countries where they are known people will not catch or eat them unless pressed by extreme hunger.

The Korean Flag.

The Korean ensign and merchant flag is a white flag bearing the great monad in blue and red. This is a symbol of great antiquity. It is to the Mongolians what the cross is to the Christian. To them it is the sign of deity and eternity, while the two parts into which the circle is divided are called the Yin and the Yan—the male and female forces of nature. Some three thousand years ago one of the writers, speaking in reference to it, said: "The illimitable produces the extreme. The great extreme produces the two principles. The two principles produce the four quarters, and from the four quarters we develop the quadrature of the eight diagrams of Feuhhi." This means little to us, though the writer may have explained the matter to his entire satisfaction. But so much we know—that the symbol had a mathematical as well as an occult meaning. There is a little puzzle connected with the Korean flag which may or may not be perplexing to the novice. Divide the great monad by a straight cut into two pieces so that each half of the circle shall contain an exactly equal share of the Yin and the Yan.

Sympathy Versus Talent

[Original.]

Clive Arvine was endowed with marked personal manly beauty. Perhaps he would have been unconscious of it had not the girls of his acquaintance constantly reminded him of it. Arvine instead of being flattered was disgusted. Beauty in his eyes was of little value. What he prized especially was talent. He was not inclined to marry, fearing that his wife would have been won by his good looks, whereas he wished to be loved for his brain and ability.

Arvine lived in bachelor quarters looking into a court. One morning on the opposite side of the court he saw a young girl sitting at a window. There was a tinge of melancholy about her face that at once won the young man's sympathy. He watched her for a long while—indeed, till she went away from the window—and after that thought about her for the rest of the day. When he went to bed her face was before him, and when he awoke he wondered if she would be at the window during the day.

That afternoon the girl appeared, this time standing with her face to the window, but apparently oblivious to what was to be seen without. He expected when she looked toward him that she would give him the admiring glance he was accustomed to receive from women, but no change in her expression was apparent, and soon after she turned away from the window.

Here was a girl who from all appearances was oblivious to his good looks. Arvine was impelled to try to win her by his talents. He wrote her a manly note stating how he had seen her and asking her consent to a correspondence to be followed by a call. He sent the missive by the janitor, who saw that it was delivered. Arvine waited with a fluttering heart for a reply.

In time he received a note signed "Sylvia Beers." Miss Beers did not commit herself, but she did not forbid him to write again, which he took for an assent to his proposition. One thing he noticed—she made no reference to her impressions on seeing him, and the omission pleased him very much. If she had seen him, which, after all, was not likely, since he had been in shadow at the time, she had not been influenced by his beauty. If she had not seen him he hoped to win her before his good looks could come into play.

Arvine wrote excellent verses. His effusions were approved by critics and accepted by the high grade periodicals. Some of his letters to Sylvia Beers were written in verse. When he wished to make love to her he did it in verse, not lackadaisical, but impressive and extremely delicate in touch. Miss Beers wrote that there was something hanging over her, the nature of which she did not explain, an ordeal that was to be endured in the near future.

Meanwhile the man who was putting all his feeling into his verse and was unwilling that his personnel should interfere with its sole effect upon Miss Beers kept away from his window. Then one day she wrote that the time for her ordeal had arrived and she was going away for a time, but that his letters would be forwarded to her. Arvine was greatly touched at her misfortune. He was too delicate to ask its nature, but he wrote her one very brief note, in which he conveyed genuine sympathy. It was followed, however, by an effusion in verse which he called "Bearing the Cross" and another called "A Rift In the Clouds."

Miss Beers was away from home six weeks, at the end of which time she wrote that she would return in a few days. She appointed a certain hour of a certain day for him to be at his window. She did not say whether she had seen him there or not, and he wrote her a point blank question asking her if she had. She evaded his question by saying that she had an explanation to make and would make it at his first call. Arvine made up his mind that she had seen him, but that his good looks had made no impression upon her. One more letter he resolved to write before her return, and in that he told her he had been loved for what he did not prize and hoped he had won her for what he did prize. The reply to this was noncommittal.

At the hour appointed for the two to appear at their respective windows Arvine was at his window first. As soon as Miss Beers appeared and saw him she threw up her hands in a paroxysm of delight and admiration.

Arvine was perplexed. Had he been certain of anything he would have dropped the matter. As it was he called that evening, and it was plain to him that his proposition was to be accepted. But how had he won—by his talent or his beauty?

Miss Beers told him that she had an explanation and a confession to make. When he saw her at the window she was suffering from an obstruction of vision. She had just been to an opthalmic hospital and had it removed. She confessed that she did not wish him to know that she was blind until it was determined that she could be cured. His letters and effusions had been read to her by her sister. She did not understand the effusions, but her heart had been touched by the letters, especially the one written her on the eve of her departure for the hospital. After this expression of sympathy she was sure that she could give him her heart if he was not positively repulsive in appearance. When she saw him she experienced a delightful relief at his manly beauty.

Arvine accepted the situation. After all the sympathy he had expressed in a few lines had got in ahead of his good looks, and he was satisfied.

THE KID

[Original.]

I was walking on the street with Dick Norval, a young friend of mine of twenty. A girl with her skirts at the tops of her boots passed us and bowed to Dick, her face lighting up with a smile.

"I had to take that kid," said Dick, "home from church last night. Her father stayed to help count the contribution."

There was something in the sweet smile that the girl gave him to make me feel as if I would like to punch his head. Still, I was very fond of him, though he was very "kiddish" himself.

"Who is she?" I asked.

"Grace Lincoln."

Eleven years passed. Dick Norval had spent the greater part of the period out of my life, then came back into it again. He was dining with me one evening, and I asked him why he had not married. We were over our coffee and cigars at the time. Dick blew a smoke ring and looked through it in a melancholy way into vacancy.

"Had a disappointment?" I asked. "Tell me about it."

"I don't mind," he said and gave me the story.

"A good many years ago, before I left this region, I used to know a very young girl of the name of Grace Lincoln."

I had not thought of "the kid" for years, but I remembered her and pricked up my ears.

"When I first knew her I was twenty and she was scarcely fifteen and altogether too young for me. She went away to school and to college and when she came back was twenty-three, while I was twenty-eight. There was a lot of difference in her, though not a great deal in me. In one respect I remained precisely the same. I still considered a girl from twenty to twenty-five about the right age for me. I was thrown a great deal with Grace Lincoln, and we became fast friends. Her father had grown very rich, and she could have shone in society, but she preferred to devote herself to an object. She undertook the dispensation of the amount her father set aside each year for charity, and, since she investigated every case thoroughly, the work took all her time. Society tried hard to get hold of her, but she said she had no time to give to it. She was a very intellectual girl, and I was never better entertained than when in her company.

"As years went on I grew more and more desirous of home life and comforts, and in thinking of a woman to preside over my household, be my life companion and all that I was not long in coming to the conclusion that the only woman I wanted was Grace Lincoln. If I couldn't get her, home life could not be for me. The more my mind dwelt on this view of the question the more attractive it became to me. I suppose I had loved the girl for some time without knowing it. Had any man stepped in between her and me I should have known it at once. But something else than a man had come to keep us apart.

"After beating about for a time without getting any encouragement I finally determined to tell her what I had on my mind anyway. She listened to what I had to say without appearing to be in the least moved by it, then told me that she had determined to devote her life to the work in which she was engaged. I replied that she must have given her heart to some one she had lost, whereupon she admitted that she had and would tell me about it.

"'When I was between fourteen and fifteen,' she said, 'I met a young man of twenty who captivated my unsophisticated little heart completely. I remember one night at church he saw me home, and I was the most delighted girl in the world. I ran in to my mother and exclaimed that I had had a grownup young man to see me home.

"'But the grownup young man evidently was oblivious to having caught me. At any rate, he didn't want me. I was not much of a conquest for him, for I was but little more than a child. He never paid me any attention, and when I was thrown with him, though I exerted myself to entertain him, he always seemed bored. I went away to school treasuring his image in my heart, but by the time I had been graduated from college it had largely passed away from me. If he had reciprocated doubtless I should now be a wife and mother, taking care of my own children instead of those who need me in much larger numbers. As it is, I am in love with my work and shall never marry.'

"'And who,' I asked, 'is this stupid ass, this natural born fool, this dribbling idiot, who permitted your heart when young and tender to slip through his unappreciative fingers.'

"She looked up with a smile and replied:

"'You.'

"It was some moments before I could understand that she really referred to me, but when I did I wanted to hire a strong man with a cudgel to belabor me for an hour every day that I might have some satisfaction upon the person who had so blunderingly lost me the woman I wanted."

He blew another smoke ring, sighed, sipped his coffee and turned the subject.

I considered this romance my own as well as Dick Norval's. I laid my pipes to capture Miss Lincoln for him and eventually succeeded. How I did it is another story.

ALBERT MAYNE MURRAY.

BLOOD MEAL AND TANKAGE.

Value of Slaughter House Byproducts as Stock Feeds.

Three general classes of these byproducts are used successfully as feeding stuffs—viz, blood meal or dried blood, tankage and meat scrap and meat meal, says Rural New Yorker.

Dried blood or blood meal is made from the blood of cattle, sheep and hogs. The blood is conveyed in pans from the killing room to the drying room, where it is cooked in small tanks until the clot separates from the water. It is next pressed to remove the water, and the pressed cake is dried in a steam drier until it contains only about 5 per cent of moisture. Then it is ground to a fine meal and sold in hundred pound sacks.

Dried blood has been successfully fed to lambs in place of milk by German experimenters. They fed about half a pound daily for a hundred pounds live weight of animal. It has also been used with good results for curing and preventing scours in calves. The value of this feed and of those made from tankage and meat scrap lies in their muscle and bone building properties. When properly fed they have a stimulating effect on the hair, making the coat silky and glossy. They are valued according to their content of protein and should be bought only on a guarantee of specified protein content.

Tankage consists of meat scraps, trimmings, bone, blood and various other waste nitrogenous matter from the packing house. It is cooked in large tanks under a steam pressure of about forty pounds for seven or eight hours, which cooks out the tallow and grease. It is then allowed to settle, and the grease is drawn off. The solid residue is then pressed further to remove the fat and moisture. It is next dried and ground. When dried it contains only 6 to 7 per cent moisture and from 40 to 60 per cent protein. Since it is made up of several different substances it is quite variable in quality. It usually contains a considerable amount of phosphoric acid, depending on the proportion of bone present. Tankage is fed principally to pigs, and one part tankage to from two to five of corn is the proportion fed.

Degreasing Wool.

What is known as degreasing wool by the "dry method" is drawing attention in Germany. This is performed by the use of infusorial earth, used as an absorbent, which is applied to the wool with great force by a current of air by specially constructed but inexpensive machinery.

Shelter the Flock.

A sheep that is not properly sheltered during the fall and winter will require more feed than one that is protected from the cold fall rains and wintry winds. It is economy to provide proper shelter, as feed is money.

Old English Sheep.

Sixty years ago there were only two breeds of sheep sufficiently well established and recognized to have separate classes at the royal show of England. They were the Leicesters and Southdowns.

The Breeding Ewes.

Not over fifty breeding ewes should be kept in one flock, and these should be of equal size and strength.

POINTS ON FEEDING

The best feed we have ever used for calves, considering the money value, is bright, sweet corn fodder stored in the early fall under shelter, says a Kentucky farmer in American Agriculturist.

Twenty calves have been wintered almost exclusively on such roughness, with only enough good mixed hay to keep up their appetites. They consumed about 150 shocks, worth 12½ cents each, and one ton of hay, estimated at $12, making a total of $30.75 worth of feed. This is equivalent to $1.50 per head for the entire winter, which I consider very cheap.

Blood Meal.

Dried blood or blood meal is insoluble in water. It usually contains about 85 per cent of protein and is therefore a valuable feed to use with corn or any other feed that is low in protein. Being a concentrated feed, it must be given in small quantities and mixed with slop, meal or other feed. To young pigs a teaspoonful per head daily may be fed, and this may be increased as the pigs grow older until a pound per day for eight to ten head is given. About a tablespoonful per day is fed to horses, and the amount for cattle varies from five or six ounces per day for young stock or steers just going on feed up to one pound per day and sometimes as high as two pounds for steers on full feed or cows in full milk.—Rural New Yorker.

Cottonseed Meal and Hulls.

In feeding steers for the market I should begin with about three pounds of meal per day, mixed with about fifteen pounds of hulls. Gradually increase until a maximum of about ten pounds per day is reached, mixed with twenty-two pounds of hulls, says a Texas feeder in Farm and Ranch. On an average eight pounds per day is sufficient, mixed with about twenty-two pounds of hulls, making a total of thirty pounds per day to each steer.

A Texas Fattening Ration.

The following weights are taken from the work of the Texas experiment station in 1896, says Farm and Ranch:

On cottonseed meal and hulls alone good two-year-old steers gain in 100 days' feeding 271 pounds per 1,000 pounds of steers. Fed 140 days these steers gain 357 pounds per 1,000 pounds live weight, but during the last 40 days they are fed lightly on corn chops. A little sorghum hay improves the ration.

THE FEET OF HORSES.

Influence of Soil on Shape and Texture of Hoofs.

An English agricultural journal says that the nature of the soil on which horses are bred and reared has a certain influence on the shape and quality of their hoofs. Horses bred in hilly districts as a general rule possess comparatively upright and small, but very strong and tough, feet, while the hoofs of horses reared on marshy and low lying land are of exactly the opposite character, being usually big, more or less flat or spreading and soft.

There is, of course, a considerable amount of difference in the quality and shape of the feet of individual horses bred under exactly the same conditions of soil. But, broadly speaking, the shape of a horse's foot is in all cases governed to a greater or less extent by the class of soil on which the animal is bred and reared. Damp soil causes the production of soft, spongy horn in the feet of young horses, and dryness, on the other hand, favors the growth of tough and closely textured horn.

The feet of growing horses reared on soft, spongy and damp soil are very apt to become overgrown or badly shaped, owing to the insufficient amount of wear which the horn is subjected to on such soil. In consequence of the horn continually growing and not sufficient of it being worn away the hoofs readily become overgrown, and if this is not remedied by the use of the drawing knife they eventually assume a bad shape.

When young horses are reared on dry uplying land, where the soil is comparatively firm and hard, the horn of the hoofs wears away at a much more rapid rate than it does in the case of spongy and soft soil, and there is much less risk of the feet becoming overgrown or assuming a bad shape. In practice this is simply borne out by the fact that the percentage of cases of badly shaped feet is much smaller among horses reared on dry and firm soil than it is among those that have been bred on soft and marshy land.

Feed of Brood Sows.

It seems to be necessary to say again that it is a costly mistake to feed a sow liberally just before she is to farrow, and especially if she has a large udder and gives other indications of developing milk freely. And it is a fact that such feeding is more dangerous with older and large sows than with cows, for surplus milk can be drawn from them as it cannot be from sows, and with the last milk fever and maybe pig eating will result.—Farm, Stock and Home.

THE ANGORA GOAT

We have not heard so much of late on the old question of oily and nonoily goats, but this is more a matter for the consideration of the breeder than it is for the mohair buyer, says S. B. Hollings in American Sheep Breeder. Heavy, soppy fleeces shrink to a large extent when clean scoured, and it needs a very expert man to estimate correctly what the shrinkage will be when they are presented to him. One large buyer in Bradford is strongly opposed to the oily goat and says that there is always a lack of luster in such fleeces. However, the hair is always sound and good, but there is no more need for an excess of yolk in mohair than there is in wool.

fair Angora show. The fleece of this handsome animal is twenty inches in length. Kingston Lad is owned by Tom Wedgewood of Kingston, N. M.

Shelter the Angora.

While Angora goats can spend most of their time out of doors during fine weather, they, like other animals, must have a place of shelter to which they can resort during storms and blizzards. Prolonged cold, rainy periods are fatal to Angoras unless sheltered. — Wool Markets and Sheep.

Angora Conformation.

The Angora goat, like other farm animals, must be considered with reference to size, conformation and constitution. The type to which the breeders should lend their efforts should weigh from 100 to 140 pounds, body quite round and broad throughout, hips and shoulders of same height, for low shoulders indicate low vitality; the hips not sloping in a pronounced degree, legs strong, but not long, and eye bright and quick. The fleece should cover all parts of the body, except inside the upper legs on the thin skin. A topknot is pretty, but does not indicate quality. The mohair should make an annual growth of not less than ten inches and be so dense as to yield a fleece of eight to ten pounds. The mohair should be in ringlets which are well formed from point to skin. Loose, slightly wavy hair is objectionable and oftentimes indicates coarseness in some degree. It is of the utmost importance that the hair be extremely fine, the finer the more valuable.

Crabs Hard and Soft.

The process of crabs shedding during the summer season is as follows: The crabs become fat; then they assume a bluish look on the back and yellow on underside. When in this condition if an outer shell be broken there will be found a skin similar to the inner skin of an egg covering the crab. In this stage the crab is known as a peeler. The next stage is when the outer shell begins to open, and the crab is then known as a buster. When the outer shell is stuffed, the crab is then a soft crab. If she has escaped from the cannibalistic male crabs, who pursue her during this period, she lies hidden in the grass in shoal water until the next tide, which hardens her shell considerably, and the crab is called a buckrum. Buckrums are the tough crabs sold as soft crabs, and when cooked the shell turns red, like that of a lobster, and is not desirable on account of its brittleness. In another tide the crabs become truly hard and go where they please without fear of being devoured by the male members.

One of Poe's Experiences.

Poe, one night during those last weeks he spent in Richmond, related this personal experience, adding that he would carry it with him to the grave.

"I was living in Philadelphia during the epidemic of the cholera there. All day I would pace the streets, seeing the dying and dead, until my heart was faint and sick within me. Late one evening, on coming home after one of these aimless wanderings, broken down and with a thousand pictures of suffering and death dancing hideously before my eyes, I lay upon the bed. In a moment I was asleep and dreamed that a black bird like a raven came into the room and perched over the door. I asked what it was. The bird replied:

"'I am the spirit of the cholera, and you are the cause of me!'

"I woke with a start, but the apparition was so real that it made an impression on me I shall never forget."—Lamp.

Origin of Grammar Schools.

"Grammar schools" are schools which were founded to teach grammar at a time when the word had a very different meaning from that which it bears at the present time.

Grammar is the science which investigates the laws of language and the art of using it correctly, and one would naturally imagine that a grammar school must necessarily be a school where the English language is taught, but it is not so.

In the middle ages, when the clergy were the only educated men, Latin was the language in which knowledge was preserved and handed down either orally or in writing, so "grammar came to mean the grammar of the Latin tongue and a 'grammar school' was an endowed school for teaching Latin (and afterward Greek) to poor scholars, to fit them for universities."

Tight Lacing and Great Men.

A correspondent says that the tight lacing periods of history have always been productive of the greatest geniuses, the loose dressing periods the reverse. Bacon, Shakespeare, Drake, Marlborough, Thackeray, Dickens, Scott—to mention only a few names—were born when chroniclers and fashion artists reveal to us the fact that "women were never satisfied till they could span their waists," and "while eighteen inches was the fashionable standard, many fashionable girls and women possessed waists fully two or three inches smaller."

But Thackeray said he would as lief marry a girl with a humped back as one with an eighteen inch waist.

Perishable Pearls.

Pearls are perishable. They cannot be considered a first rate investment like diamonds. After a time they decay. Sometimes a fine specimen will lose its luster and beauty within a few months, so that the possessor of such treasures does well to keep them put away in a sealed place. They consist of thin films overlaid one upon another, with more or less animal matter between the layers, and it is no wonder that they deteriorate.

Soap That Floats.

A floating soap is produced by the mass of soap being "beaten" while it is cooling, just as we beat eggs or batter. This incorporates air into the soap and makes it float. A given bulk of floating soap weighs much less than the same bulk of soap that does not float. One hundred pounds of soap beaten will make many more cakes of a given size of floating soap not beaten. It is due to no ingredient. Any soap will float if beaten. A soap is no better because it floats. This is no sign of a good soap. The only advantage is in being able to find the cake more easily if it be dropped into the bath or wash tub. In soap factories the soap is beaten by machinery.

Routing Burglars.

"You can't lose my wife."

"No?"

"Well, listen. I was away from home for three days last week. One night she heard burglars, the same burglars that she has been hearing ever since we were married. 'I'll make them think there's a man in the house,' she decided. So she put on a pair of my shoes and tramped about on the hardwood floors for an hour to scare them away. My wife is a diplomat."—Cleveland Leader.

Bent Water Pipes.

It is calculated that one right angle bend in a pipe through which water flows will make necessary 9 per cent more pressure for a given flow than is required for a straight pipe of like size and structure. With three sharp bends at right angles the pressure needed is 13 per cent more than that which is used in a straight pipe.

A Careful Judge.

This story is related of an old time judge: During a session of court there was so much talking and laughter going on that the judge, becoming angry and confused, shouted in great wrath: "Silence, here! We have decided half a dozen cases this morning, and I have not heard a word of one of them!"

Reminders of the Moors.

Concerning the dwellings in the Argentine Republic a traveler writes: "Wherever there was a collection of houses I was greatly struck with the character of the architecture—like Arab or Moorish villages, one great wall without windows surrounding them. The country is very quiet now—safe enough for a bevy of schoolgirls to travel it by day or night—but still the peculiar architecture remains. At Negra Muerta, where we camped, there was only one large building, once the headquarters of the 'estanciero,' who owns hundreds of square leagues of the surrounding country, but now tenanted by his manager, a superior sort of half breed Spanish Indian, with his family. There was the huge square outside wall without any windows of any kind, one arched doorway and the inside house or houses built against the outer wall and facing into a patio—a most Moorish looking place. Truly the occupation of Spain by the Moors has left its deep markings; they extended across to the new world, influencing today even the customs of the Indians of Spanish South America."

Shoemaking In the Black Forest.

The Black forest of Germany, a region famous for centuries, is hundreds of years behind the present age in methods of living and conducting simple industries. This fact is strikingly exemplified in the primitive ways the natives follow in making leather and shoes. When a farmer kills his beef he takes the hide to the local tanner, who will keep it for two years before he considers it fit for the shoemaker. When the hide is leather the shoemaker is informed of the fact.

Then some morning the shoemaker comes to the farmer's house with his kit of tools and for the time being is one of the family. Every Katrina and every Johann is marched before him and measured, and the work of making shoes for the family begins. It may take a month, more or less, but he sticks to his job until every one is properly shod, when he is away to the next customer needing his services.—Shoe Retailer.

MARRIED.

At the First M. E. Parsonage on Wednesday evening, Nov. 23, Mr. William J. Summerville of Granby and Miss Harriet E. Fitch of Hannibal were united in marriage by the Rev. John Richards.

The attractive home of Mrs. Fanny VanBuskirk on West Fourth street, this city, was the scene of a quiet little wedding party on Wednesday evening, Nov. 23, when Mr. Charles Erwin Quirk of Fulton and Miss Belle Diedrick of Lysander were united in marriage, the Rev. James Vincent officiating.

Syracuse Post-Standard, Saturday: Howard J. Wright of Watertown, and Mrs. Nellie Chubb, of Fulton, were married on Thanksgiving day by the Rev. O. N. Fink, at his home, No. 1,212 South State street. Mr. and Mrs. Wright will make their home in Fulton.

On Sunday morning at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Chesbro, corner Fourth and Highland streets, occurred the marriage of Miss Helen Chesbro to Mr. Frank Elliott, the Rev. G. R. Foster officiating. The young couple are very popular in this city, Mr. Elliott being a member of the firm of Brown & Elliott, of the west side. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott are enjoying a brief bridal tour, after which they will make their home in this city.

Miss L. Grace Henderson and Assemblyman F. G. Whitney were united in marriage on Saturday evening at 6 o'clock in the Congregational church in Pulaski, by the Rev. Jesse B. Felt. The bride, who is a graduate of Pulaski High school and Vassar college, and had been preceptress of Pulaski High school for several years, is exceedingly popular socially, and the groom who has been re-elected member of Assembly from the Second District, is a prominent attorney in the County. The wedding was largely attended, as was the reception which followed at the home of the bride's mother on Lake avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Whitney are enjoying an extended bridal trip, after which they will make their home in Pulaski.

On Wednesday evening at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Frank Sears, Miss Carrie B. VanValkenburg and Mr. James Arthur Darby were united in marriage. The bride and groom are deaf mutes and the wedding service was read by the Rev. Harry VanAllen of Utica, who understands the sign language. The home had been decorated with ground pine, yellow chrysanthemums and cedar, and presented a very beautiful appearance. A collation was served following the ceremony, and Mr. and Mrs. Darby left on the evening train for a wedding trip to Niagara Falls. They will make their future home in Ira.

Thursday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr and Mrs Peter Klein, about three miles east of this city, occurred the marriage of Miss Ella Anna Klein to Mr. Horace W. Baggs, the Rev. S. D Robinson pronouncing the words that united the young couple. The bride and groom were attended by Miss Lena Bailey and Mr William Baggs, and the ceremony was performed in the presence of the immediate relatives. A bridal supper was served at the conclusion of the ceremony, and Mr and Mrs. Baggs drove to this city where they took the train for St. Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Baggs are heartily liked by their many friends in this vicinity, where they have resided all their lives, and they will receive hearty congratulations.

DIED.

Frank Martin, aged 35, died at his home on Wednesday, after a long illness. He is survived by his widow and three small children.

Josiah Tasker, aged 80, died in Syracuse on Monday, from old age. His wife, who is deceased, was a half sister of Mrs. M. H. Brando and formerly resided in this city.

Minnie, the 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moses P. Perkins, died on Sunday at the home in Fay street. The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon, the Rev. S. D. Robinson officiating. Interment in Mt. Adnah.

Mrs. John H. Chubb, aged 58, died at her home in West First street on Friday, after a long illness. The deceased is survived by her husband a son Charles, and daughter, Mrs. William Pierce, of this city. The funeral services were held on Monday.

Lettie, the wife of James Rill, aged 45, died as the home of her sister, Mrs. Mark Wilson, in West Second street on Saturday, after a long illness. A prayer was made at the late home on Tuesday morning by the Rev. G. R. Foster, and the remains were taken to Carley's Mills for the funeral and interment.

Basketball Won by Fulton.

The basketball season was opened on Friday evening, with a splendid game in the City Hall, between the Fulton High school team and the Phoenix High school team; Fulton winning by a score of 39 to 30. Both teams played well, but the superior team work of the local boys secured the victory for them. Mr. Deb Pritchard acceptably served as umpire.

The line-up was as follows:

Phoenix (20). Fulton (39).
Van Ward (captain)........................
....................Harry Parks (captain)
Left forward.
Allen Carter.......... ....Harry Webb
Right forward.
Harry Pendergast...Jay Hollingsworth
Center.
Charles Ralph..............Glenn Streeter
Right guard.
John Watson.................Frank Morin

The goals were thrown as follows: Hollingsworth, 6; Parks, 4; 5 fouls, Webb, 4; Streeter, 1; Ward, 5; 1 foul; Carter, 2; 1, foul; Pendergast, 2.

There was considerable doubt for several days last week as to whether Fulton would witness any basketball games this season or not, owing to the high rental asked for the City Hall. Mr. Jay Hollingsworth appeared before the Common Council at their last meeting, and so earnestly plead his cause that he secured a price concession which made the games possible. Now it behooves our people to patronize the games liberally and help the boys defray expenses. There is no prettier or more exciting Winter game played than basketball. and the High school team plays it well. They choose for opponents, teams difficult to beat, making the games even more interesting. The next game will be played in the City hall on Thursday evening, Dec. 1, between the High school team and the Jenner Preparatory School team of Syracuse.

HOW TO MAKE BUTTER.

Simple Directions For the Handling of Milk and Cream.

Replying to an inquiry as to buttermaking on the farm, H. G. Manchester says in Rural New Yorker:

It would require pages to go into all the details of buttermaking, but some simple directions may be of service Whatever the vessels are you use in which to keep the milk, get them into cold water (ice cold is better) just as soon as possible after milking, so that the cream will begin to rise at once and will not be disturbed. Too many people allow the milk to stand around a half hour or more, absorbing bad odors and stirring up the cream that has begun to rise. We want all the cream.

You can skim at twelve hours from setting if the water was cold and the milk put in at once after milking. After skimming, keep the cream cool until you are ready to ripen it. We should churn at least twice a week, and three times is preferable, as old cream will not make as good quality of butter.

The day before you are to churn put the cream all in one receptacle and warm it gradually to 70 degrees. Add to the cream a half pint of good buttermilk for every ten quarts of cream. Stir the cream several times, so that it will ripen uniformly, and if kept in a cool, airy place, in the morning it should be ready to churn. The top will have a smooth, leathery appearance if it is all right. Your eye and taste will soon show you.

If your churning is done in a cool room have the cream at 62 degrees when you churn or 60 degrees if the room is not cold. You can hardly get along without a dairy thermometer, which you can buy of any dairy supply house from 25 cents each up. These are circular, all glass, and will float in the cream, are easily cleaned and are much better than guesswork.

The Cow For the Dairy.

The record of the herd of the Connecticut experiment station, kept for a period of five years, shows that a cow of distinct dairy type is a better producer of butter fat than is one of a beefy nature. Cows of good dairy type yielded 300 pounds of butter fat per year, while those that were fleshy yielded only 20 pounds of butter fat per year. The former made a net profit of $28 per head and the latter about $6 per head, showing the importance of properly selecting the cows for the dairy.

The Cow to Keep.

Do not be a "stickler" on color or size nor decide to let a cow remain in your herd because she has a good escutcheon and pretty horns, says C. W. Pratt in Farm Visitor. If she weighs only 600 pounds, is as black as a crow and has neither escutcheon nor horns, but yields the butter, keep her. You want the cow that will produce the most butter at the least cost. Do not be influenced by looks, but by the yield of milk and butter.

Silage and the Silo

I have not known of instances where cabbage has been put into silos, but inasmuch as cabbage is very prone to rot when massed together I should expect a great lot of foul, rotton material to be taken from the silo, says Professor Stone of Cornell university in Rural New Yorker. Of course we are familiar with the process of kraut making, in which case the material is well preserved, but in the making of kraut the mass is pounded and compacted until the juice of the cabbage is started in such a way as to fill the interstices between the particles of cabbage and thoroughly to drive out the air, so that the fermentation does not proceed very far before all the air is consumed. It would be impossible, I think, to compact the mass of cabbage in a silo sufficiently to produce this result.

Silage a Healthful Feed.

Many attempts have been made by ignorant persons to discredit with consumers the milk made from ensilage. It is a great injustice to the producer, as it tends to debar him from the use of one of the best forms of feed for milk production. It has been amply demonstrated that good ensilage properly fed imparts no injurious effect to the milk. Silage is one of the most healthful foods that can be used during the winter, when otherwise the cow would be on dry feed, and there is no question but that the most healthy cow will give the most healthful milk.

A Silage Ration.

At the Wisconsin station the average amount of grain fed to the dairy cow is about eight pounds per day. This, with forty pounds of silage and six pounds of hay, constitutes a day's ration for the average cow during the winter, though this amount varies considerably.

Shredded Stover In the Silo.

The evidence of practical experience is accumulating that we can run the mature dry corn through the husker and shredder and by using sufficient water on the shredded stover and packing it into the silo it will cure into very good soft, sweet feed, says L. W. Lighty in National Stockman. When it is desirable to separate the ear from the plant this method is certainly preferable to putting the shredded stover in a mow and allowing it to mold and firefang as it generally does.

Silage a Good Roughage.

Professor D. W. May of the Kentucky experiment station in a recent bulletin on the feeding of dairy cows says good roughness is essential in dairying, and the more profitable these feeds may be the more of the higher priced grain replaced. Of our coarse feeds grass, corn, silage, alfalfa and clover hay rank high.

DAIRY COW EDUCATION.

Development Will Keep Pace With the Dairyman's Progress.

Dairy cow education or development is the one great thing we need at the present time. Probably not one-tenth of the cow keepers in New York have the skill and persistence fully to develop the stock in hand or know its possibilities. This is not a question of breeding, but does concern our farm economy.

In the case of animal building the one essential that stands out as pre-eminently requisite is greater power of assimilation for this one man out of ten to handle. We do not need greater hardiness, in the usual acceptance of the term. Dairy cows are to have greater comforts in the future by way of protection and warmth. Nor, in my judgment, is there any place for a cow with unusual strength of bone and muscle especially adapted to long range foraging while cows are to be pastured. The tendency must be toward increased stable feeding (soiling) or smaller pastures with more herbage.

Nature's laws are fast and immutable. The dairy cow will develop no faster than we develop the dairyman to look after her wants, else there would come destruction to her race. New York is naturally, if the word has not lost its significance in the dairy world, adapted to the dairy cow. She must have, so long as manufacture and commerce remain its great wealth producers, splendid markets for her product; hence her development should be guided along specific lines of increased power of assimilation and milk secretion.—H. E. Cook in Rural New Yorker.

The Barnyard and Clean Milk.

In the production of clean milk no one thing is of more importance than keeping the cows out of filth. Many yards into which dairy cows are turned each day for their drink and exercise are knee deep with mud and manure during the winter and spring if not nearly the entire year. In summer when cows are on pasture they would keep comparatively clean were they not obliged to wade through a filthy yard going to the stable for milking.

The yard should slope from the barn and be covered with gravel or cinders sufficiently deep to form a hard surface. Manure should not be allowed to accumulate against or near the barn, and no swine pen should be nearer than 200 feet on account of the odors from it being readily absorbed by milk.—Illinois Experiment Station.

Dirty Milk.

Dirt in milk makes more undesirable butter than all the wrong methods of working. No perfection of working out buttermilk and working in salt can secure the proper flavor of butter from dirty milk.

Cause of Milk Fever.

It is not premature milking—that is, milking before calving—that is thought to be conducive to milk fever, but exhaustive milking soon after calving.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Bad Temper.

Usually it's not the cow that has the bad temper to begin with, but the man who handles her.

Feeding the Milk Maker

Cabbage to be fed to dairy cows without damaging the flavor of the milk or butter must be fed very carefully and no diseased cabbage given to the animals, says Professor Stone of Cornell university in Rural New Yorker. I do not believe that cabbage can be carried very far into the winter without enough of the leaves becoming decayed to injure the flavor of the milk unless indeed at feeding time the decayed leaves were carefully removed, which would be a process probably too expensive and disagreeable to be warranted for stock feeding.

Taint From Green Feeds.

It has been our experience that nearly all of the green feeds, such as green clover, rye. oats, peas, corn, etc., will give more or less taint to the milk if fed immediately before milking, but fed afterward there is time before the next milking for the blood to be purged of its unformed bitter principle and the milk is safe. As to turnips, cabbage, potatoes, etc., I am inclined to believe if the food is clean and tops not frosted they can be fed with the same immunity from harm that clover can.—Michigan Cor. Hoard's Dairyman.

Steamed Cotton Seed.

The Mississippi experiment station concludes from three years' work that milk and butter from cows fed on steamed cotton seed cost less than that from cows fed on raw cotton seed and but little more than half as much as that from cows fed on cottonseed meal. The butter from steamed cotton seed is superior in quality to that from either raw cotton seed or cottonseed meal.

Protein and Milk Production.

There is no evidence that an extra large amount of protein in a ration stimulates milk production. If protein is high a skillful feeder may use a ratio wide as 1:8.5 with good results.—National Stockman.

Proper Quantity of Feed.

What is the proper amount of food for a cow? Such an inquiry cannot be satisfactorily answered, as each cow is an individual, having peculiarities of disposition. There are preferences among animals for certain foods, and they have their likes and dislikes. A cow may have an excellent appetite today and refuse the large share of her food tomorrow. Each cow must be studied and her wants satisfied, those yielding milk being fed more liberally than the cows that are dry or nearly so.—Home and Farm.

Robber Escapes.

Chicago Examiner, Nov. 26: Early in the evening, in the full glare of an arc light, Mrs. J. H. Francis, 5710 Ontario street, was yesterday attacked by a daring highwayman, who, wearing rubber-heeled shoes, crept up noiselessly behind her. He tore a $250 diamond brooch from her dress, snatched a purse containing $65 from her hand and made good his escape. The robbery occurred at Waller avenue and Ohio street.

Mrs. Francis, who is the wife of former Alderman Francis, says she was returning home at 5:30 in the evening and was aware of no danger until the robber, apparently a young man, slipped up behind her and seized the brooch at her throat and tore it from her dress "I was so frightened at the time that I could neither cry nor resist the robber," said Mrs. Francis, "Taking advantage of my fright, he seized my purse and escaped."

The robber is said to have worn a slouch hat and a rough, long overcoat, his face almost hidden by the coat collar.

Mrs. Francis said that he must have worn rubber-heeled shoes, as she did not hear his approach until the robber was upon her.

[Mrs. Francis is well known in this city where Mr. Francis was at one time editor of The Times. Her many friends will extend congratulations that she escaped the robber without suffering bodily harm.]

DEY BROTHERS, PRIVATE BANKERS

Liberal Interest on Deposits—Home Safes, A Recognized Feature Elsewhere.

Dey Brothers, who for the past 21 years have been closely identified and allied with the business interests and progress of Syracuse, have entered the financial field as private bankers. Banking offices are handsomely equipped on the ground floor of the Dey Brothers & Company's store, and a general banking business as conducted by private bankers is in operation. This comprises the receiving of interest earning deposits. The matter is presented to the public in a new and especially attractive manner, embodying many features conducive to the benefit of the depositor, and Messrs. Dey Brothers solicit depositors not only from Syracuse, but from the territory adjacent thereto, and in the receiving of such accounts to furnish each depositor with the practical means of saving money. Concerning this move Mr. Dey relates:

"In the conduct of a business such as ours, we are necessarily placed in close relations with a large number of people whose wants, requirements and accommodations we are desirous of conserving. Having this in mind and also a fairly comprehensive idea of the possibilities of the business and trade conditions of Syracuse and vicinity, we have formed a co-partnership to engage in banking as private bankers, under the firm name of Dey Brothers, private bankers. We will receive deposits, pay drafts and receive accounts subject to an interest earning arrangement. Our plan contemplates as liberal treatment of depositors as is consistent with sound and economic management. We further intend to pursue a vigorous campaign concerning the manifest advantages and self evident necessity of saving money."

Mr. J. W. Stone of New York City is now taking charge of the office of the new firm and he has installed the features planned by Messrs. Dey Brothers. Mr. Stone comes fully equipped with technical knowledge in banking matters, and with years of experience in means and methods concerning same. He says:

"In connection with the receiving and handling of funds and accounts as is common with banking concerns, Messrs. Dey Brothers have introduced and installed here the Home Safe plan of saving money. This system has become a recognized feature in banking circles and is being successfully operated by various National, State and Savings banks, as well as Trust companies throughout the State. In brief this plan is as follows:

"The opening of an account with a minimum deposit. The furnishing of a pass book showing such deposit properly credited and containing the rules and regulations governing deposits, withdrawals and the interest rate the depositors will enjoy. This having been accomplished, and usually this first step is the stumbling block to most people, a steel, strong box is furnished each depositor without any fee or charge. The steel box or safe is intended for home use, and is constructed to receive money, both coin and bills, but money once placed in the safe cannot be removed by the depositor. Messrs. Dey Brothers alone hold the key. Thus the very common and usual temptation to spend is removed. Lastly, deposits arising from the use of these safes will earn a substantial rate of interest.

These steel safes in the homes of the people will act as a constant reminder as well as a custodian for their surplus funds, and the use of the safe will undoubtedly instil thrift and economy."

Already the Dey bank has met with the hearty approval of Fultonians, and in many homes in this city, the neat, steel-savings banks have become features. Deposits may be sent by mail and the pass books have been constructed especially to serve this purpose. This bank pays 4 per cent. on deposits, computed quarterly, which substantially augments the fund deposited in the course of a year.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S GIFT.

Statue of Frederick the Great Presented by the Kaiser to America.

Washington is a city of statues and monuments, but as a general rule the sculptural embellishments of the public places of the national capital commemorate American patriots, soldiers and statesmen, not those of foreign countries. An exception to this rule is the statue of Frederick the Great, which has been erected on the esplanade of the Army War college, and which will be unveiled with impressive ceremonies on Nov. 19. This statue is a gift to the United States from Emperor William of Germany. On the announcement of the gift some discussion arose as to the propriety of accepting a statue of a monarch for erection in the capital of a republic. The decision was in favor of receiving the statue and acknowledging by appropriate ceremonies the friendly spirit of the German ruler in presenting it.

This statue is a replica of one made about six years ago by Professor Uphues, a leading German sculptor. It now stands on the Avenue of Victories, in Potsdam, and is of marble. The statue presented to America is of bronze and of heroic size, being seven feet in height. It was brought to this country recently.

On the occasion of the unveiling the army and navy will be well represented, and many officers of German descent will be present.

Frederick II. of Prussia, who became known as Frederick the Great, was born in 1712, and his reign lasted from 1740 until his death in 1786. During this long reign the extent of the kingdom of Prussia increased by more than 29,000 square miles, while the population increased from 2,240,000 to 6,000,000. Industry and the arts of peace flourished, the condition of the people was improved, and Frederick, who was himself a prolific writer, gave the encouragement of his patronage to authors, scholars, musicians and workers in the fine arts.

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

Keep Yourself In Touch With What Your Children Read.

Ask yourselves a few pertinent questions, such as, "Do I know what my child is reading?" "Is what he is reading worth while, or, better, is it of most worth?" "Is it varied enough to make him an all round man?" "Has my child a library card?" "Yes," you say, "he has one and gets what he pleases on it." May your guardian angel preserve you from your just dues if such be the case.

Mothers, are you letting teachers take your place in guiding your children's reading? If so you are simply letting slip out of your hands one of the most potent means of governing your flock. Go to the teacher and ask her to make out a list of books that she thinks best suited to your child. Make out a list of your own, compare them, weigh them and call in a third fist to help decide which is of most worth. "Much ado about nothing," some one will say. Not at all.

Pray do not misunderstand me when I speak of books of most worth and think that I mean those that give most information. Far from it. Let the child revel in good fiction, dream in fairyland, wander among the fables and myths and dance and sing with the poets. But let it not stop there. See that he lives over again the lives of our great and good men and women, fights again the world's battles, knows intimately the "creepin', crawlin' things," the birds of the air and the plants of field and highway. But, whatever he reads, guide it yourself. Know exactly where your child is in the great realm of literature.—Exchange.

WON'T HURT THE HOME LIFE

Giving Women the Ballot Won't Detract From Her Dignity.

Men differ as to religion and politics, but in their ideal of woman they stand firmly united. With one accord they declare that the ideal woman is the one who devotes herself above all things to the ways of her household, and so exclusive must this devotion be that one of the most frequent objections to woman suffrage is that even the fifteen minutes a year necessary to the casting of her ballot would seriously interfere with her home duties.

It has always seemed a detraction from the dignity of marriage that a wife's duties were so closely allied to those of a valet or a household servant. A man would not seek inspiration after a hard day's work in the society of either, and yet we find men saying that women best adorn the home, but we observe that in general men avoid it for as many hours a day as possible.

Has it come to this, then, that men do not really care for the ideal which they profess to cherish? They flock in numbers to applaud woman as an actress and as a lecturer. The less she conforms to their ideal the keener seems their desire for her society.

A few weeks ago in Washington the geographical congress was proud to honor Mrs. Fanny Bullock Workman, who holds the world's record among women for high mountain ascents. She has scaled a number of the giants of the Himalayas, which have never been climbed by any man excepting her husband. What could be more foreign to the cherished ideal than mountain climbing, and yet here is a case where by trailing that ideal in the very dust Mrs. Workman finds herself the trusted friend and companion of her husband and the honored speaker at a geographical congress! What, then, is the status of the much vaunted ideal? The honors seem to go the other way. It is absurd to expect women as a class to devote their lives to fulfilling man's ideal only to find the finished product a drug on the market.

ANNA C. ETZ.

A VERY LOW PEDESTAL.

That on Which Women Are Placed With Other Inferior Creatures.

In a recent number of Collier's Weekly Richard Harding Davis gives a vivid description of the Yoshiwara of Tokyo and pictures for us "The Ladies of the Golden Screens," caged behind bars of iron like wild beasts. He wonders "how a nation can advance as Japan is advancing when its women hold so low and insecure a place."

"The American," he says, "is used to placing his women folks on a pedestal." Ah, yes! So he is.

In many states today women are still standing on the pedestal of the old English common law. Their property belongs to their husbands. Even the clothes they wear are not their own in the eyes of the law. They cannot buy and sell as single women can. Their wages belong to their husbands, and they cannot make a will.

We place our women on pedestals by opposing their higher education, debarring them from the learned professions and relegating them to the kitchen and the nursery. There are but nine states in the Union in which a married mother has any right to the "custody, care and nurture" of her own child. In the rest of the states mothers stand on a pedestal and fathers have the legal right to manage the entire life of their children, even to removing them wholly from the "custody, care and nurture" of the mother.

In most of the states women are denied all participation in the affairs of the government under which they live, and they stand on a very lofty pedestal along with idiots, minors, lunatics and criminals.

A pedestal is a good place for a statue, but a very poor place for a live woman. Her place is on the common earth, side by side with man, sharing his responsibilities, his privileges and his rights. This is the sort of pedestal to which women are slowly and surely climbing.

"LAND OF SUNSHINE"

Some Notes by an Observant Correspondent on a Trip to the Pacific Slope.

EDITOR TIMES: I am sending you "some notes and observations from a tourist-car window," thinking perhaps some of them may be of interest to your readers.

Many are familiar with the route from Fulton to Chicago, so I will pass that over. On Thursday evening, Nov. 10, at 10 p. m., we left Chicago via the Santa Fe line, on an elegantly appointed train, consisting of twelve coaches. We retired as soon as the porter had our births ready, and as the track was smooth and the cars comfortable, we immediately dropped to sleep, not waking until morning, when we found we were at Marceline, Mo., 351 miles from Chicago. From Chicago to Dodge City, Kan., clocks and watches are run on what is termed Eastern time, one hour slower than New York State time. At 9:15 a. m. we crossed the Missouri River and at 12:45 p. m. we were at Kansas City, where a long stop was made, and all who wished, had an opportunity to mail letters or cards. At tea time we were at Emporia, Kan., 586 miles west of Chicago. The next morning, Saturday, we were at Las Animas, Col., Between that place and La Juntas a vast bare plain, neither a tree nor house to be seen for many miles, and the only vegetation is the scrubby sage bush. After leaving La Junta we saw bare alkali plains with railroad grants for ten or twelve miles on either side of the tracks, the land is valueless except as it protects their right of way. Passing Thatcher, 1,074 miles from Chicago, we come in sight of the Spanish peaks, 14,000 feet high, snow-capped and chill-producing to survey, although they were eighty miles away.

At Trinidad, a dining station, we saw the first trolley cars since leaving Kansas City. Before leaving Trinidad, two immense mountain climbing engines were coupled onto our train [illegible] assist until we reached [illegible] tunnel. This tunnel is 1,000 yards long and has an elevation of 7,800 feet above sea level—the very highest elevation attained on this line, and a very trying point for consumptives or people troubled with weak hearts. We had in our car four consumptives en route to a milder climate, and, as they hoped, to renewed health. One young man from Massachusetts caused our tourist conductor great anxiety for fear he would not survive in the rarified atmosphere, until we reached the summit and dropped down on the other side. The surrounding mountain peaks were capped with snow and we saw boys skating on ponds as soon as we emerged from the tunnel.

At 4 p. m. we arrived at Wagon Mound, New Mexico, (what's in a name?) where the buildings were of adobe, with the exception of a few railroad buildings, which were of wood sheathed with corrugated iron. I did not wonder that they put their wooden buildings in iron cases when I learned the price of lumber. Prices are practically prohibitory except to capitalists.

Near Las Vegas we saw a large iron bridge that had been carried off its abutments and down stream by the flood about five weeks since, and at the same time there were several hundred feet of the road bed washed out. As we pass on, we see on our left a territory or range of thousands of acres, sprinkled over with cattle as far as the eye can reach; then we approach a rocky elevated plateau, from 100 to 200 feet high, almost perpendicular sides, 600 to 800 feet wide, and reaching back for miles. After passing that—a repetition of the big range again, almost a dead level. It was a strange sight, this immense elevation on a level plain, miles in extent.

On Sunday, at 6:30 a. m., we passed the Zuna Indian chapel up among the rocks at the right. Tradition says it was built over 400 years ago. At the distance, it looks like an immense irregular rock itself.

We stopped at Galup, on the dividing line between New Mexico and Arizona, 1,534 miles from Chicago. Its a queer little place, very primative, with a liberal mixture of adobe houses or hovels. The country is broken by high, rocky ranges, and having a heavy train for the mountain grades, we are over 3 hours behind schedule time. We next stopped at Holbrook, the station nearest the petrified forest. We are here amused at the varied grades of juvenile precocity, in the efforts of the native children to sell pieces of the petrified wood. At 12:10 p. m., we pass over the high bridge over Canyon Diablo

We were aided very much in our investigations by a Mrs. R. D. Blount, an Indiana lady, who in her youth moved to Needles, Cal., the first Santa Fe station after crossing the California line. She later married Mr. Blount, who is secretary in the superintendent's office. She had been East after her aged mother and was now escorting her to their California home. She was very entertaining to us all from her intimate knowledge of the Santa Fe system, having been over it many times.

For miles hereabouts, the character of the country seemed changed, and as far as the eye could reach it was covered with juniper trees from four to ten feet high. They are apparently a species of deciduous growth and give the country a very novel appearance in comparison with the miles of sandy plains passed over.

We next stop at Flagstaff, the most progressive appearing town we have seen for many a long mile. It had many very fine business blocks of brick, and streets broad and level.

Between here and Williams, the next stop, we pass what is called the Arizona Divide, 7,355 feet elevation, and pass in what is called Johnson's Canyon. The engineering skill illustrated here is simply marvellous. The track bed is cut out of the sides of the mountain, making literally a shelf of rock on which we run. On our right, close to the train, the mountains tower up hundreds of feet; on our left, sheer precipices 100 to 150 feet, apparently square, below us, with track so crooked that I can see at several points our engines and seven or eight of the cars from my window without raising it. It would be a bother to attempt to do that, for the windows are double sashed and every precaution is taken to keep out the dust as we run over the dry, sandy plains. Before we pass out of the Canyon, we pass from the base of one mountain to that of another on iron bridges over chasms that are simply frightful. Between Ash Fork and Glud, we run the Horshoe track. Between the two points of the shoe, in plain sight from the elevated point, I [illegible] 100 to 125 feet.

At 4:30 p. m., we were at Seligman, 1,808 miles from Chicago. We here make the third change in our watches. The second change was at Dodge City, one hour slower to mountain time, now to Pacific time—another hour back—so we are now three hours behind New York time. We make one more stop at Kingman, then a run of 60 miles brings us to Needles and we are on California soil, and enter the Great Mojave Desert, 1,954 miles from Chicago.

On the 14th, we are at the station Mojave, about the center of the desert, and at 8:30 a. m., we are at Tehatchapi Summit. From here there is a sharp descent to the plain below and we have a more striking demonstration of engineering skill in overcoming the barriers the old Rockies have set to obstruct the passage of mankind. As at Johnson's Canyon, we skirt the bases of the hoary-old monarchs on the shelf tracks, and over chasm bridges, until they can do it no longer, then we plunge into tunnels through their bases, until we pass eight or ten of them; then out on the big loop where the line encircling the base of an old monarch, doubles on itself a complete loop, one track passing under the other with a drop of forty to fifty feet at point of crossing. From start of loop to finish the conductor told us, it was as a bird would fly, about 18 miles, yet we pass over about twenty-eight miles of track to do it. We then run seven or eight more tunnels, (eighteen tunnels in all) and we come out on the plains near Kun Junction. This is the uniting point of the Union Pacific with the Santa Fe line, and in a short time our train is at Bakersfield station, where I leave the car that had been my home for four days and five nights.

Before closing this letter it is but justice to say, that we all (in our car at least) were much gratified with our experiences on the Sante Fe line; the sleepers are models of neatness; the woodwork has a high finish and the sanitary arrangements perfect. Every official we had to do with, we found very courteous and obliging.

I would especially mention the tourist conductor of our car, No. 3035, Mr. J. P. Conway, a native of Syracuse, was especially kind and considerate of all under his care, and would frequently pass from seat to seat pointing out objects of interest as we passed them, advising as to dining stations, etc. in short, would earnestly recommend any or all of my friends coming to the land of sunshine and oranges, to try the Santa Fe system, its shorter by nearly 250 miles than any other route to San Francisco and Los Angeles, and I can wish no better lot [illegible] traveling friends, than that they [illegible] themselves under Mr. Conway's care.

ECONOMY IN COOKING.

Don't Waste Leftovers, but Serve Them Up in Dainty Form.

We've got so used to looking upon French cookery as extravagant that it comes as something of a shock to discover that the Frenchwoman is far more careful in striving against waste than we Americans.

Absolutely nothing is wasted, either by her or the Englishwoman across the water. "Leftovers" are coaxed and heartened up into a delicate, delicious, appetizing dish. All sorts of things that we throw away as not good French and English women have discovered a use for.

Englishwomen especially are economical to a fault, but their economy often takes a squalid form. The endless appearance of leftovers, not disguised, but the same thing served over and over again until it is entirely eaten, becomes unpalatable.

It's a great art, the art of always having enough, always having a variety, and of using every bit in an attractive, interesting way.

No woman with a husband and a family has a right to disregard the question of providing the greatest possible amount of nutrition in proportion to bulk nor that of having things tempting, so that the feeling upon leaving the table is not that you've eaten because you had to and still feel unsatisfied.—Exchange.

Curious Ways of Crabs.

Certain species of crabs cover themselves with seaweed in order to deceive their foes. One crab was seen by the naturalist Eisig in 1878 to [illegible] off zoophytes, those plantlike animal colonies which grow on shells [illegible] stones, and to fix them on the [illegible] and hairs of its shell. A still [illegible] romance of defensive tactics is [illegible] found in the case of certain [illegible] crabs. They live in the [illegible] of whelks and wrawl about [illegible] back. [illegible]

[illegible] fixed to his shell, like [illegible] the Old Man of the Sea. [illegible] taken of this anemone. It [illegible] the crab, and if the latter has [illegible] a new shell by reason of his [illegible] he tenderly shifts his tenant off the [illegible] abode and places him on the new one.

The Sea Wolf.

A sea wolf caught by salmon fishers of the Esk in Montrose, Scotland, is described as follows: "Its mouth measured seventeen and one-half inches across and when fully opened the circumference was fifty-two inches. The lungs were like a white parasol cut in two. In the middle of the fish were two 'paws' remarkably like hands, the five fingers being attached by a fine membrane. The sea wolf's habit is to lie at the bottom of the water, with open mouth, manipulating two codlike flappers to attract its prey. These flappers are fixed over its head. On being cut open the wolf's stomach was found to contain a sea gull, which had been swallowed whole. As soon as the bird was removed the spectators were even more astonished to find a big eel, which was still alive."

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 30, 1904.

THE Spectator, of London, predicts that the coming Roosevelt administration will be strong in its foreign policy; will maintain the Monroe doctrine; go on with the building of a big navy, and give an example of sound, sane government to the English-speaking race. The editor of the Spectator, Mr. John St. Loe Strachey, is an Oxford man, and a little over a year ago visited this country and was a guest at the White House. His journal is regarded as one of the foremost in the world.

The Rural Press in the Campaign.

The press of New York State, and especially the small dailies and weeklies printed in the interior, where Republican majorities are made, have reason to rejoice over the success of the State ticket. The election of President Roosevelt was conceded and the Democrats centered their efforts therefore on the governorship, sustained by a mistaken belief that Republican disaffection was too great to be overcome. The editors of the Republican Editorial Association of the State of New York decided to pay particular attention to the gubernatorial campaign, and the result shows that their work was as effective in 1904 as it was in the very close electoral battle in this State two years ago. At the opening of the campaign, Lieut. Governor Higgins was appalled by the opposition which had been deliberately inspired against him by those who had no reason to be otherwise than friendly. Meeting the situation as he has met every other crisis in his life, with manly resolution and courage, Mr. Higgins decided to make a tour of the State and to invade every camp of the opposition. His frankness and sincerity won the day, and a superb victory is the result. No man ever called to the governorship of this State has given stronger pledges to [illegible] of an honest, economical and independent administration than Frank W. Higgins. We know of no one in the State who has had a wider legislative experience or a profounder knowledge of the cost of the State government in all its various departments. For nearly a dozen years he has devoted a large part of his time, most unselfishly and generously, to secure a legislation curbing extravagances and abolishing official abuses. He has done this at the risk of friendship and at the sacrifice of the cheap popularity which attaches to public men who are lavish in the expenditure of public funds. We predict that the governor-elect will be in every sense the governor of the State and that he will give the people an administration which in business sagacity, common sense and conservatism, has rarely been equaled and never excelled.—Leslie's Weekly.

Only Makes a Bad Matter Worse.

Perhaps you have never thought of it, but the fact must be apparent to every one that constipation is caused by a lack of water in the system, and the use of drastic cathartics like the old fashioned pills only makes a bad matter worse. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets are much more mild and gentle in their effect, and when the proper dose is taken their action is so natural that one can hardly realize it is the effect of a medicine. THE ROYAL CHATTEL

UNHAPPY FATE OF MANY OF THE PRINCESSES OF EUROPE.

They Are Sacrificed In Marriage to the Convenience of Kings—How Woman's Destiny Affects a Nation's. The World Waking Up.

Princess Louise of Belgium, the unfortunate whom all Europe is openly condemning and privately commending, has given evidence that something of the quality of the American "new woman" is being infused into the women of ancient houses of Europe, which have for so many years bartered away the lives of their women as cheerfully and as carelessly as if they were forests of wood or quarries of stone.

From the day when kingship was first conceived as a "divine" institution down to the present day women have been sacrificed to the conveniences of royalty without regard to morals or religion, and to this fact the present decay of the reigning houses of Europe may be traced.

With perhaps one or two exceptions the crowned heads of Europe are the decadent offspring of a decayed line of "divine right" rulers who ignore with amazing cheerfulness the "divine" in their right to rule.

A nation is free only as its mothers are free; a nation is moral only as its mothers are moral; a nation is spiritual only as its mothers are spiritual.

Plot and secrecy and lying and conniving on the part of a nation's women will eventually breed the canker and worm that will undermine the nation.

The women of royal Europe are diplomats in the art of dishonesty and concealment. Why? Because by dishonesty and concealment alone can they obtain a small freedom from the immorality to which an unjust system of government condemns them.

Read the sorry story of this unhappy daughter of a king—the purity of her girl life murdered by the drunken roue to whom she was sacrificed at the age of seventeen; compelled to accept life as the legal wife of a man cruel, indecent, drunken and vile, because he could boast of the blood of kings; when in a crucial moment her outraged womanhood refused to become the jest of himself and his drunken companions she was cruelly beaten by her royal owner, and when she still further refused to submit to the indignities of her position she was shut away from the world, called insane and kept under the most careful surveillance. She escaped the vigilance of her captors and defied the whole fabric of royal policy by joining the man whom she preferred to her royal husband and her royal family.

Perhaps Princess Louise is a silly woman, as silly as the crown princess of Saxony, who a short time ago created wide consternation by her elopement with the tutor of her children. But both these women were the innocent victims of a political system of marriage that would put the marriage customs of the south sea islanders to shame.

The continued intermarriage of half wits will in time produce idiots or something worse, and the women who have no better examples than victimized mothers and drunken fathers cannot be expected to hold in high esteem the husbands which a king picks out of the royal garbage box for them.

But the acts of these two royal women in openly defying the system is a far more encouraging sign of the ultimate fall of the system than are the private intrigues which are winked at and kept under cover.

The whole world is airing the iniquity of forcing a woman into marriage with a man who has no claim to love, to respect or to decency simply because he can claim royal blood—a marriage which forfeits every claim to the natural and ideal requirements of such a state and which begets children a little worse than their fathers and mothers before them.

All royalty is not to be condemned for the excesses of some of its members. The German emperor has said a few timely things about the husband of the unhappy Princess Louise.

KATE ALEXANDER.

Honored by Its Enemies.

All genuine reforms have found opponents even among those who most needed the benefits to be conferred by success. In the present aspect of the woman suffrage movement in the state of New York history simply repeats itself. The opposition as thus far developed on the part of some women, with whom to rule or ruin is a necessity of their nature, is necessary to complete the parallel between them and their prototypes as portrayed on the pages of history and should be accepted as the sign manual of merit in the movement honored by such opposition.—J. M. Thayer.

A Privilege and a Duty.

It is my opinion that every citizen of the United States, whether male or female, should esteem it a privilege and duty to exercise the right of suffrage.—Elmer James Bailey.

A HOME SHAMPOO.

How to Clean the Scalp and Have the Hair Soft and Fluffy.

Washing the hair is a task most women dislike, and even the girl who can least afford the dollar a month necessary to a professional shampoo prefers to pay it at a sacrifice rather than bother to wash her own hair. Yet if the work is gone about in the right manner at home it need not be difficult at all.

The first thing is to prepare a shampoo liquid. Take a square inch of some good soap, shave it fine and dissolve it in half a cup of hot water. Then add a teaspoonful of violet ammonia and the raw white of an egg. Beat these thoroughly and strain through a wire sieve. Now stand with the head over a basin, pour a little of the shampoo over the scalp and rub briskly with both hands. Use all the liquid in this way, rubbing it thoroughly on the scalp. After this wash the scalp with several basins of warm water and then wash the long hair in the basin of water. Rinse by holding the head over the bathtub and pouring over it a stream of warm water, keeping this up until the water that drips from the hair is perfectly clean. Then dash with cold water to close the pores and prevent taking cold.

You are now ready to dry the hair. First wrap it in a thick towel and wring thoroughly. Then spread a dry towel across the back, throw the hair back and rub the scalp well and dry. It may take some time, but it is the best possible means of drying, acting as a massage too. Call in the aid of the sun if possible, but never use steam. Do not brush the hair until it is thoroughly dry. Then, as you brush, raise the hair, that the strands may be separated. After this combing will not be difficult, and when the hair is ready to go up it will be soft and fluffy.—Chicago News.

PEG DRESSES.

A Grandmother's Hint About Gowns and Their Wearing.

"The way to be well dressed," said grandmother, "is never to have 'peg dresses.' That was my mother's rule, and I have always made it mine.

"What are 'peg dresses?' Why, gowns that hang in one's closet, are not often worn and get a little out of style. They are apt to be the 'best gowns,' by which I mean those for dressy occasions. Most of us have but one, which is worn so seldom that it becomes a problem to keep it always in style, for there is a limit even to the changing of sleeves and alteration of the adornment of lace. When that is reached the owner must be firm with herself and discard the dress in its present form. For this reason I think it a good plan to have this gown of rather inexpensive material and let its beauty be in the way it is made; then when it must step down from its high estate we can put the scissors to it with better grace, for I have always found that it takes moral courage to attack a rich gown which is just too much out of fashion to wear. As this dress must be made over, I think it well to purchase a material that will afterward be suitable to go with the rest of the wardrobe either as fancy waist, trimming or perhaps as silk petticoat."—Brooklyn Eagle.

CULINARY CONCEITS.

Tough meat may be made tender by sprinkling with vinegar.

If hard boiled eggs are placed in cold water before peeling, the shells will not adhere to the eggs.

When making mayonnaise sauce select a very cool place for the purpose. If made in a hot kitchen it is apt to separate in the process.

Cut stale bread into very thin slices, place on a tin and dry in the oven till crisp. Store these wafers in a tin and eat with cheese or buttered for tea.

Remember not to add butter or oil when browning salted almonds. They will retain enough of the salt without. Besides, the butter makes them indigestible.

Muffins and gems made without eggs, but with more milk and butter, the batter beaten with a wooden spoon till it is very light, are said to be indistinguishable from those made with eggs.

Her Blessed Power.

Alluding to the good influence exerted by a kind hearted woman of humble life and retiring disposition a great writer on moral and religious subjects says: "What was the secret of her power? What had she done? Absolutely nothing, but radiant smiles, beaming good humor, the tact of divining what every one wanted, told that she had got out of self and learned to think of others, so that at one time it showed itself by sweet words, at another by soothing a sobbing child. None but she saw those things. None but a loving heart could see them. That was the secret of her blessed power. The woman who, whatever her station in life may be, will be found in trial capable of great acts of love is ever the one who is always doing small ones."

Be Agreeable.

A woman in company to make herself agreeable must always seem pleased and contented. She must give the impression that she is really enjoying herself, whether that be the case or not.

The woman who wants to make herself liked by being agreeable must have one style for all. There must be no consideration of position of parties in this respect. The rule should be one style for rich and poor, no fawning on the one or haughtiness for the other. The woman who adopts this [illegible] line of behavior ends by being [illegible].

Old Forks.

A London jeweler has made a collection of ancient forks used in England which show some little known facts about the table manners of a few centuries ago. The forks, which are of solid silver, date from the sixteenth century. In many cases the designs in all this time have scarcely varied in any detail, and the forks look like those which might be bought today. The old forks were a great luxury in their time and were only used by the aristocracy.

On a certain occasion Henry Ward Beecher's church was crowded to the doors. But Beecher unexpectedly had been called out of town, and in his place in the pulpit there sat a beardless, black clad youth—a youth who is today one of the most powerful preachers in America. But this youth, fresh from college, was unknown then, and the great congregation had come to hear Beecher and not him. Consequently as soon as he arose and announced that he was to preach in Beecher's place the people began to drift out. First one went, then two, then a half dozen, and the young man stood watching this dispersal from the pulpit. It was a trying moment, and yet there sat on his youthful face a smile singularly composed. Out the people tiptoed, and he waited, saying nothing, for almost five minutes. Then he said, as if in explanation of his silence, "We will not begin this public worship until the chaff blows off."

How an Artist Secured Recognition

[Original.]

This is a true story.

About the middle of the last century there lived in France a sickly little boy. He was of an intellectual cast and his mother desired to give him an education. To do this she practiced pinching economy and often worked in the fields, as so many peasant women do in France. The boy made progress in his studies, but his natural bent was art. So when he was fifteen it was determined that he should go to Paris with a view to making a painter of himself.

"Go, Bastian, my dear boy," said his mother, "and may you one day be able to support yourself by selling your pictures."

The boy studied and painted for seven years. Meanwhile he had become a man and reliant on his own exertions for a livelihood. He found it rather a life bordering on starvation. Still he struggled on and though the world did not care to buy his pictures he made slow but sure improvement. The first thing for an artist in France to do is to paint a picture worthy of the salon. If this picture passes the committee and is hung on the walls that stamps the painter as proficent in art. Bastian starved and worked on a picture for this purpose, but just as he was finishing it the Franco-Prussian war came on and the Prussians marched with but little delay to Paris and laid siege to the city.

The salon was forgotten in the great work of defense. Bastian went with the others into the trenches, but on the first day of the siege a shell fell at his feet and wounded him. He was carried to his home in the country, where he lay ill and idle for two years. The work on his picture for the salon had been ruined during the siege by a shell that exploded in his studio, but Bastian could not remain idle always, and as he was too delicate for manual labor he resolved to return to Paris.

There was no prospect of his making a success at painting pictures to sell in the usual way, so he painted cheap fans. But even this was high art compared with what followed. One day a patent medicine manufacturer gave him an order to paint a picture illustrating his remedy's virtues. There is something horrible to one of an artistic nature in thus degrading his beloved art. Nevertheless the price to be paid for the picture would give Bastian the wherewithal to silence his hunger for several months. He repressed his distaste and undertook the work.

The theme he selected was a landscape bathed in the sunlight of April. The leaves on the trees were of that tender pale green only seen for a week or two in the month of sunshine and showers. Around a fountain danced a group of young girls. The advertising feature was that the fountain came from the spring of the elixir of youth, or the patent medicine.

Bastian, being a true artist, while he worked forgot the ignoble use to which his picture was to be put and became absorbed in it. The landscape and the dancing girls under his touch became things of beauty. The coloring was delicious; the delicate leaves shone in the soft April sunlight; the maidens became living beings, fair and graceful.

When the picture was finished its creator looked at it, and the melancholy fact came upon him that it was to be used as an advertisement. He could not resign himself to believe that it was not fitted for a better purpose. Indeed, he was much pleased with his work. While he was musing before it the man who had ordered it came in.

"Let me offer it at the salon," pleaded Bastian.

Now, the patent medicine man knew no more about the rules regulating the salon than he knew of art.

"The very thing!" he said. "But first paint a rainbow arching over the fountain with the name of my medicine on it."

Bastian explained that such a feature would not pass at the salon and it would ruin the picture as a work of art.

"Very well," said the manufacturer angrily. "Then I will not pay you a sou for it."

Bastian was in despair. He could not give up the price of his labor without going hungry. There was but a slender chance of the picture's being accepted at the salon. Hundreds of hopeful artists send pictures there to have them refused. Would he not meet the same fate? Nevertheless there was something so attractive about his picture that he had not the heart to spoil it by a glaring advertisement. He resolved to go hungry and send his picture to the salon.

Then came a weary waiting while his contribution to art was being examined with hosts of others. One day news came that his picture had been admitted.

It was a relief, but did not insure success. Would it have a place before picture lovers merely or would they prize it?

The result, though it did not all come at once, was pronounced. The picture attracted great attention, sold for a good price, and orders came for others. Bastian, relieved of his distress and finding himself enabled to do the best work, left off painting fans, and so far as pictures for advertisements were concerned he was floated far above them. He became a patient laborer in an exalted field and in time produced pictures that placed him among the greatest French painters.

But what said the manufacturer of medicines?

"What a pity that so valuable an advertisement should have been spoiled!"

BRUCE PARKER.

"THE SEEDS OF DESPOTISM."

Planted by Those Who Denied Equal Rights to Women.

In his great speech at Louisville, Ky., on Oct. 20, William Jennings Bryan said:

"My friends, four years ago we quoted a prophecy of Abraham Lincoln. He said the perpetuity of this country was not in its armies, its forts or powers; it was in the spirit that prizes liberty as the heritage of all people in all lands everywhere. He said, 'Destroy this spirit and you plant the seeds of despotism at your own doors.' We quoted this four years ago, and some people could not see. They thought the Pacific ocean was so wide that the seeds of despotism could never float across. It has only been four years, and yet the seeds of despotism have come, and they fell in Colorado, and there you have a Republican governor who has been suspending the constitution and deporting laboring men without indictment, trial or evidence, and we cannot condemn Peabody without condemning our own government that for six years has been doing the same thing in the Philippine Islands and denying constitutional liberty to the Filipinos there."

The seeds of despotism in this country were not blown across the Pacific ocean. They were planted here by the men who founded a government "of the people, by the people, for the people," and then denied "constitutional liberty" to one-half the people.

When American men care so little for the constitutional rights of American women as to allow women to be classed with idiots, lunatics, criminals and minors you cannot expect them to regard the constitutional rights of the laboring man or the Filipino. There is no stranger spectacle than that of men like Bryan and ex-Senator Edmunds of Vermont, party leaders, statesmen, Democrats and Republicans alike, hunting around for "the seeds of despotism" in the negro question, the labor question and the Philippine question when those seeds have lain for more than a century in the heart of what we call the woman question.

LIDA CALVERT OBENCHAIN.

A FRIEND TO WOMEN.

George Frisbie Hoar Was a Stanch Advocate of Equal Rights.

From his first appearance in public life the late United States Senator Hoar of Massachusetts was an earnest upholder of all kinds of legislation for the benefit of women and was instrumental in the passage of many laws which have given to them better opportunities of education and wage earning, and, above all, he was a fearless champion of the political rights of women.

A strong attachment existed between him and his estimable wife. When Mrs. Hoar died last winter his friends predicted that he would not long survive her. His lifelong advocacy of equal rights for women was doubtless made more earnest by his association with this noble woman.

All his public addresses on this subject were characterized by a high respect for womanhood. In a speech delivered at Amherst, Mass., Mr. Hoar said:

"I believe that the republic will never reach the lofty ideal of the conception of our fathers, it will never attain the high moral quality which will be alike its strength and its safety, until that qualification shall be given to it by the help and co-operation of woman.

"The moral temperament which determines permanently the history of any community is given to it by its women. No nation, no city, no household, ever took a lofty place where the influence of woman did not inspire it with the heroic temper. But this influence can only be exerted by woman to its fullest extent when she shares the responsibility and takes her proper and fair part in the conduct of the state which she is to influence.

"Whenever in the household woman is admitted to the confidence of her husband she can be depended upon for all household virtues of economy, of self sacrifice and purity. It is only when she is excluded from that confidence that she sets the example of selfishness and frivolity."

POLITICS' ONLY HOPE.

When Women Vote, Reform Clubs and Reformers Will Not Be Needed.

Rev. Mgr. M. J. Lavelle of St. Patrick's cathedral, New York, in a recent interview regarding woman suffrage said:

"I believe that the hope of purity in politics lies with women when the other sex has equal rights with the men at the polls, not in one or two states of the Union, but in every state. Then, and then only, will there be no more use for reform clubs and reformers.

"Women, the great majority, would not vote for a party platform, but it would be found that the man who aspired to office, his personality, his life in every aspect, would be the factors which dictated the decision of women's ballots.

"I believe with a woman suffragist who said recently that the only man who is worse than a repeater is the man who doesn't vote at all. If nothing else should be obtained from equal suffrage I am sure that women if they had the right to vote would never let an election get by without putting a ballot in its box. They would at least express an opinion."

Fatten Horses On the Farm

From a document issued by the Iowa Agricultural college we learn that the following method of fattening is practiced at some horse fattening establishments: Corn is given at 5 o'clock in the morning and water at 7. Hay is fed at 9 o'clock and also oats and bran in the proportion of two-thirds bran and one-third oats. At 12 o'clock corn is again fed, and at 3 o'clock oats, bran and hay are given, the same as at 9 in the morning. At 4 o'clock they are again watered and at 6 are once more fed corn. When corn is fed from ten to fifteen ears are given at each feed.

When oats and bran are fed three quarts are given at each feed, making in all from thirty to forty-five ears of corn and six quarts of oats and bran per day. And to add to the injury thus done to the staying powers the horses are not given any exercise, partly because of the idea that exercised they would not fatten so quickly. To avoid swelling in the legs because of want of exercise Glauber's salt is used. It is fed mixed with the oats and bran and given about twice a week. In some instances oilmeal is added to the food mentioned because of the effect it has upon the skin and coat.

Farmers should not lose sight of this fact, as persons conducting those establishments get the profits which the farmer ought to have. Their agents go through the country and pick up horses poor in flesh. They do so as such animals can be purchased cheaply. They are then subjected to the system of fattening described above and in a short time are sold at greatly increased prices. In some instances great gains are made. One instance is recorded of a gain of 5½ pounds per day for a period of 50 to 100 days. In another instance 12 horses made an average daily gain of 3 1-3 pounds for a period of 90 days.—Farmer.

Shoeing Colts.

In shoeing colts they should be shod according to the work intended for them to do. If for the road, shoe with plate shoe with a little heel calk on the hind shoes, no toe calk, says C. W. Broadhead in Pennsylvania Report. If the feet are crooked, build up with a thick sided shoe, so as to bring the feet as level as possible. If the colt is to be shod for draft purposes and needs calks shoe with as low calks as possible, always setting the toe calk back from the edge of the shoe some distance, that will cause the colt to set his foot down on the ground square to pull, and he will learn that in the start and never climb on his toes, as a horse will do if he has the toe calk out on the extreme edge of the shoe, as is the habit of most shoers today.

Establishing Pure Bred Swine.

I do not think any farmer can make a success of pure bred swine if he is constantly under the thumb of some fellow breeder, says an Ohio farmer in American Agriculturist. It is often difficult to know just what breed to select and where to get the first animals. I have seen more than one failure where a wrong start was made. I always buy the very best individuals, considering carefully the breeding of the animals. I have always selected from the leading strains. By starting right the battle is half won. In making a selection a farmer must rely largely on his own judgment. He should acquaint himself with the type of animal preferred and not be satisfied until just what is desired is found. A nice head and ear, strong back slightly arched, full heart girth, broad and deep across the hams and shoulders, good strong bone that will carry plenty of flesh, are points to consider. Fine quality of hair is also a special feature.

Balky Horses.

Don't overload the horse, for this causes more balky horses than any other one thing, says a correspondent of National Stockman. There are many other causes. It may be bred in the horse. I know of one tribe of horses all of which are affected with the disease. But most cases could be prevented by being careful in loading. When the ground is a little soft is a likely time to overload or by getting into ruts on the road when the wagon is heavily loaded. If we watch all these little points most cases could be prevented. Be careful, as there is no medicine which comes in a bottle which will cure the balker.

Selecting the Ram.

When buying a ram for breeding purposes remember that he cannot transmit qualities that he does not possess himself, says Wool Markets and Sheep. If you want a ram for mutton purposes select him for his form and let the fancy points alone. See that he has good carriage, level back, well sprung ribs, broad chest and is wide between his hind legs; also see that he has a bright, full eye and good breadth between the ears. Remember that the ram is half the flock, and upon his selection depends much of your future success.

Cooking Sheep Feed.

In many cases it will pay to cook grain feed for sheep when only recently penned. The sheep is fastidious under confinement, and his whims must be consulted. Learn what grain is wanted and begin with that, gradually changing to the ration you decide to feed.

Hog Notes.

Feeding to the pigs is one of the best ways of disposing of small and imperfect fruits and potatoes.

Feeding the sows plenty of slops made of middlings and milk will help them to give plenty of milk.

"Pint Judy Pint."

Point Judith, Rhode Island, is known to the natives of that neighborhood as "Pint Judy Pint." Once upon a time, the story goes, an old sea captain of Nantucket or thereabouts took his wife with him upon a voyage along the coast, and, being enveloped in a fog, he made her lookout. After awhile the woman piped out, "Land!" "Whar away?" bellowed her lord. "Why, right over there, just the other side of all those ropes," she answered excitedly. "T'other side o' fiddlesticks!" roared the captain. "Can't you tell me in straight talk whar away?" Now it happened that the captain's wife was unacquainted with nautical terms, and while she could do many useful things she could no more have boxed the compass than she could have flown. So the captain shouted to her, "Pint, Judy, pint!" Then Judy "pinted," and the shore she had discovered and indicated was ever afterward known as Pint Judy Pint.

Eugenie and the Cholera.

One morning a parish priest rushed into the ward where the empress was ministering to a dying man.

"Oh, your majesty," said the priest, "two hours ago my curate was breakfasting with me, and now he is dead!"

The empress smiled calmly. "That is well," said she.

"Well?" echoed the priest.

"Yes, it is well. When once cholera becomes as violent as this is it ceases."

The empress was right. From that day the plague abated.

Queerly Procured Evidence.

Many years ago a ship was chased at sea on the suspicion that she was a slaver. During the pursuit her captain dropped something overboard. When overhauled the old tub was taken to Port Royal for trial. There was nothing on board to sustain the charge of slave dealing, and there seemed every likelihood of its owner recovering damages for illegal seizure and detention. But another ship had passed in the night in the wake of the others. She had witnessed the chase and flight, but had stopped to catch a shark by the way. In the stomach of the shark the sailors found a tin box. In the box were the papers of the fugitive vessel. These proved her to be a slaver of the most unequivocal character, and upon their evidence she was condemned and confiscated.

CUPID'S TILLER

[Copyright, 1904, by Ruby Douglas.]

Just now the girl in the bow and the man at the tiller of the Cupid were not on speaking terms. For fully ten minutes the frigid silence had been broken only by the swish of the boat's prow through the water and by the splash of the waves on her cheeks.

And for fully ten minutes the wind had been rising, with Cupid in full sail.

"Why," the girl asked mentally, "doesn't he take a reef?"

"Why," the man wondered, "doesn't she become frightened?"

Savagely he shoved the tiller down and ran up into the wind. He would bring the Cupid about with a whirl that would at least transform the pretty pout on the face in the bow into an expression of amazement.

But the little yacht, unaccustomed to such strenuous handling, balked at the turning and, flapping her white sail pitifully for a minute, dipped over into the stormy waters.

Two "Ohs!" sounded simultaneously as the man and the girl felt the cold water close over them; then, as they bobbed up, the right arm of the man firmly encircled the girl's waist, while he held the boat with the other. Without a word he raised her to the side of the overturned yacht and climbed up himself.

The girl laughed. "It's pretty wet," she said, trying hard to keep her balance on the wave rocked boat.

"Ah—yes!" Plainly the man was relieved. For a minute he had cursed his own recklessness, but if she were only "wet" need he worry?

A lapse of a minute ensued while they adjusted themselves to their unusual positions.

"Aren't you sorry?" asked the girl, surveying her bedraggled duck frock.

"Aren't you?" the man retorted. The plunging had not cleared the atmosphere; remnants of the frigidity remained.

"For what?" the girl asked innocently. The sun was beating down on her and restoring her wet curls to their natural glimmering golden hue.

"For this," indicating the position of the Cupid.

"I didn't do it."

"But you drove me to it," the man persisted.

"I hadn't said a word for hours when you deliberately ran into the wind and—and upset us," she declared emphatically.

They were drifting to shore, but not to their own side of the sound. Neither of them noticed where their boat was heading.

"I didn't think she'd go over, but I'm glad now that she did." The man's face had taken on an expression of determination.

"Oh!" with utter astonishment. "And I might have been drowned."

"Not while I was with you," the man assured her.

After a minute the girl looked at him. "How are we to get home?" she asked. "I have an engagement this evening."

"I am aware of that," the man returned. "And with me."

"I believe I explained to you before—before the boat went over that I was not going with you to that dance."

"And I am explaining to you now that until you promise to go with me instead of that Thompkins fellow tonight you will not go at all." His tone was firm.

A wave nearly threw them off their balance, and the sail flapped back and forth joyously in the water. The Cupid was laughing.

The man went on: "It is mean advantage, but think, haven't you played with me long enough? Aren't you going to tell me what I've wanted to know so long?" He moved closer to her and in so doing rocked the boat dangerously.

"N-no," the girl answered between breaths.

"Then we'll stay here. We will remain on this overturned boat until you promise to marry me—and soon too."

"But if—if I don't love you," argued the girl, avoiding his eyes.

"You do, though," he said confidently.

The girl elevated her eyebrows. Things had taken a new turn.

"I'll drown if—if we stay here much longer," she said after a minute, trying to assume a pleading tone.

The man drew still nearer—almost close. "Don't you love me, dear?" he asked.

"You—you know," she said, grabbing the side of the boat as a big wave swept them several feet on its crest.

The man put his arm slowly, firmly, about her waist. "And you will marry me?"

He heard only the flapping of the Cupid's sail in the water. The girl did not answer.

"Won't you?" he repeated.

The girl slid slowly from his embrace, looking him full in the eyes. Her feet touched the water.

"Yes," she cried, and struck out among the waves with a stroke even the man might have envied her—had he not been too astonished.

"And—Jack," she called between waves, "you—see—I—I did not have to say 'yes.' I can swim."

The man righted the Cupid, but when the girl again, wet but still pretty, sat beside him at the tiller he noticed where they had drifted.

"Your engagement!" he cried.

"Oh, and see where we are," she said, but there was no regret in her tone.

"Yes, see where you are," the man [illegible], encircling her with his arms. "And you're going to remain here al-[illegible]

A GIRL'S ROOM.

Some Suggestions Pointing the Way to Health and Comfort.

It is much better to forego all drapery about the bed, although if you feel that you must have a canopy let it be a dainty muslin that can be frequently laundered.

Be most particular to have your bedding well aired and sunned every day, all except feather pillows. Sun is said to draw the oil from the feathers; but they should be exposed to a current of air. Great danger lurks in damp bedclothes. Especial precautions in this regard should be observed in travel. Damp linen offers encouragement to microbes. And now as to the walls of this habitation of yours. Oil painted walls are the most hygienic and most satisfactory. In hospitals a pale yellow or drab has been found most pleasing to the eye. A plain color is always more restful than a figured hanging. Have you not all had the experience when you were sick of chasing some grotesque figure around and around with your wearied mind until the very pattern was seared into your brain? Oil painted walls, too, can be wiped down daily if you wish with oiled cloths. They are indestructible, too, unless you disfigure them with nails. Your ceiling should be light in color. It is most advantageous to have a hardwood floor in the bedroom. Carpets should be banished and only rugs employed. Choose a closely woven rug that it may hold as little dust as possible. Your summer rug should be made of grass or fiber. Such a floor covering is both satisfactory and inexpensive. These can be taken up and cleaned every week.

The broom should always be dampened when used, and a carpet sweeper is better, for it gathers up all of the dust without scattering it around the room. When dusting use a damp cloth, never a feather duster. Keep your dust cloth clean, washing it out after its use.—Ladies' Home Journal.

SERVICEABLE SCREEN.

Cover a Hinged Frame With Burlap and Daintily Decorate It.

One of the prettiest ways of getting up a screen is to have a carpenter make a plain, strong wooden frame, with its three "leaves" separate, and then to cover it yourself with burlap in colors that fit in with the general color scheme of the room. The burlap should be tacked on neatly and smoothly, without a wrinkle, then the leaves joined by little brass hinges and the whole screen decorated. One girl gave herself a constant reminder of the woods in autumn by painting autumn leaves in rich glowing colors on her dull green screen. Another chose blue and painted in outline work a row of little Dutch figures clear across the top.—Philadelphia North American.

The Ball That Can't Tangle.

Those who knit and crochet know the trouble caused by the ball of yarn or floss falling and rolling about the floor. This trouble is easily obviated if the yarn is wound so that it can be used from the inside of the ball instead of in the ordinary way. Unrolling from the outside is the cause of the ball's rolling propensities. First wind the wool or silk six or eight times over the outstretched fingers of the left hand, giving as great a length as possible to the windings and keeping in mind the fact that these windings are to be pulled from the center when the ball is finished. With these first windings always protruding at the top and bottom, proceed as usual, winding very loosely. When the skein is wound the outside end is tucked in securely, and the first is pulled out. After once using and experiencing the satisfaction of a nonrolling ball the knitter will never go back to the old method of working from the outside.

The Lovable Girl.

To be placed in the corner of a young girl's mirror and read while she is making her toilet:

She cultivates reserve.
She thinks, then acts.
She speaks ill of no one.
She is loyal to her friends.
She lives in her mother's faith.
She cares for her body as God's temple.
She writes nothing she may regret.
She knows there is nothing more undignified than anger.
She knows that to love and be loved is her birthright if she is but worthy of love.—Hubbard City News.

Bath Mitts.

For the after bath rub nothing is better than the mitts of Turkish toweling, which quickly bring an exhilarating glow to the skin. They can be bought in the shops, but are far less expensive when made at home.

Use the ordinary Turkish toweling by the yard, and bind the seams and top with linen tape.

A ROYAL ELOPEMENT

[Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure.]

We were lying in the harbor of Cherbourg, France, in the American schooner yacht Meteor, when the Count Dubarry came aboard and chartered her for the strangest voyage you ever heard of. His countess had eloped with an Englishman named Messmore on his yacht, the Flying Cloud, and we were to overtake the craft if possible and bring back the lady.

It was a foolish idea in the count to chase his wife under any circumstances, but in this case he was an old man, in poor health, lame and had never even made a voyage across the English channel. We were a small craft with a big crew, and all hands were crowded for want of room, but the old fellow was willing to suffer any inconvenience and run any risks for the sake of overhauling the elopers. He had two friends and a doctor with him, and it was his lavish use of money which prepared us for sea so quickly. The runaways had a fast craft, plenty of money, and they would not be overhauled if they could help it. The count had a craft equally as fast and had vowed to hunt them down if it took five years. That was the way things stood as we sailed out of the harbor in a craft as well found and manned as ever put to sea.

We got down to Madeira without getting word of the craft and after a race to the Canaries were again disappointed. It was two days after leaving the latter group and while holding for the Cape De Verdes that we got our first news. It came from an English man-of-war, which had come upon the schooner to the south of the cape while she was repairing damages received aloft during a squall. Messmore could not even suspect that the count was after him, and so he would take his time and not carry too much sail. Thus we reasoned, but there was not much consolation in it. We might run a parallel course with him for a week and neither one sight the other. We might pass him by in the night, or he might shorten sail while we cracked on. Luck was with us, however.

One morning when well down the African coast we encountered an English brig which had passed the schooner the day before and so closely as to catch her name. She reported the Cloud as driving along at an easy pace, and then we felt that we must overhaul her within two or three days. Just before sundown we caught sight of a sail ahead of us, and everybody aboard believed it to be the craft we were pursuing. The count and his friends passed the night drinking and jabbering and walking about, and they plainly said that they meant to sink the Englishman sooner than let him get away from us. It was our plan to close up on her that night, but not too much so, as it was dark and rainy, and we feared to overrun her. Men were on watch below and aloft all night, and when morning came the Cloud was dead ahead and only two miles away.

It was planned that we should speak the pursued and give out that our chronometer was out of order. If she lay to in response to our signals the captain would board her with three or four men and detain her until the count and his friends could follow. We flew a signal as soon as she was discovered, but she gave us not the slightest attention. As we came nearer she took alarm and made more sail, and then began the real adventure. With a man like the count to back him, our captain did not hesitate to open fire on the other craft, and she was struck twice before she got out of range. The count was on deck and fair to be seen, and we plainly saw Messmore and the countess aboard the other. If the latter craft had been armed there would have been a pretty fight.

That was the beginning of a race which had its end days later and at a point hundreds of miles away. When sailing close hauled the yacht had the heels of us, but we could beat her on any other wind. We had one heavy gale and several dark nights, and we lost sight of her half a dozen times, but she held a true course for the Cape, and we followed after and finally overhauled her when she was but two days away. She was lying to when we sighted her at daybreak, and as we approached and got the gun ready a boat was lowered from her side, and her captain was pulled aboard of us. He asked for the count and said:

"Your countess is aboard of the yacht, but declares that she hates the sight of you and will never return. You have followed us for days and days, but there is no need for the chase to go on longer. We are bound for the Cape, and there Mr. Messmore will go ashore with you and give you satisfaction."

The count and his friends jumped at the chance. The man even raised his hat and bowed to his eloping wife as she appeared to view on the other craft. Two days later we arrived at Cape Town together, and next day the duel came off. Of the two the Englishman was by far the coolest. Things had to be arranged to deceive the authorities, and no one outside of principals and seconds was permitted on the ground. Everything was carried out with the greatest punctility, and as the two took their places to fire Messmore's face wore a smile of contempt and amusement. He seemed to feel sure that he would kill the count, but at the first fire he fell and never even spoke. The count got away before the authorities took charge, and his wife, after a short stay at the Cape, returned to Paris and was forgiven by the husband, though she never again went into society.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

If an artery is severed tie a small cord or handkerchief tightly above it.

For cold in the head nothing is better than powdered borax snuffed up into the nostrils.

Broken limbs should be placed in natural position and the patient kept quiet until the surgeon arrives.

Hemorrhages of the lungs or stomach may be promptly checked by taking small doses of salt, the patient being kept as quiet as possible.

Nose bleeding may be stopped by snuffing lemon juice into the nostril from which the blood issues. It has long been known to physicians that lemon juice is a most powerful styptic.

Powdered rosin is the best thing to stop excessive bleeding from cuts. After the powder is sprinkled on wrap the wound with a soft cotton cloth. As soon as the wound begins to feel feverish keep the cloth wet with cold water.

Table Mats.

Asbestus is so much used now for the protection of different things that many dainty covers are designed for the concealing of the material itself. Doilies are made double, and the table mats are to be slipped inside when used on a handsome polished table as the only covering.

These can be made at home at less expense and much prettier than the machine made ones to be bought. If a woman is clever with her needle she can embroider such flowers as will go with her decorative ideas for a luncheon, a Sunday evening collation or any simple meal, for which an uncovered table is suitable—a set embroidered in strawberries for a strawberry luncheon, one in violets, another in nasturtiums and so on through the list. All sizes should be provided, as even the heat from the teacup spoils the beauty of a finely polished table top, and it is very difficult to restore this polish once it is damaged.

WOMAN'S WORLD

EDNA DOW CHENEY.

A Massachusetts Woman Who Has Helped Make American History.

Among the galaxy of bright Massachusetts women who have helped to make the history of this country is Edna Dow Cheney, author, preacher and reformer and famous in days of yore as a journalist and a stirring agitator in women's movements. Edna Dow was born in Boston June 27, 1824. In 1853 she married Seth Willis Cheney, the artist. Early in life Edna Dow came under the influence of Margaret Fuller, Emerson, Alcott, Clarke and Parker. She aided in forming the Boston School of Design For Women, the Women's Medical college, the New England Hospital For Women and the Horticultural School For Women. During the civil war she was secretary of the Freedmen's Aid society.

She was president of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage association in 1879 and has long been identified with this reform. She is a vice president of the Free Religious association. Her literary work, which is considerable, is devoted largely to philosophic and religious subjects.

Hints on Success In Cakemaking.

Of course all eggs are washed before being used in order that the clean shells may be utilized for clearing soups and coffee. Eggs should never be beaten in a tin dish nor with a tin spoon, as the metal imparts an unpleasant flavor to the egg. When directed to be "slightly beaten" the yolk and white are not separated and only given about a dozen strokes with the whisp, but "well beaten" means until very light and of a pale yellow color. Eggs should be very cold to whip well and a narrow dish used when only one or two are required.

Cakes in which the yolks of eggs are used require less heat than cakes made with the whites, since the yolks are so rich they burn quickly. For most cakes it is not absolutely essential that eggs and each ingredient as added be beaten separately, but all materials can be put into a dish at once, and one long drawn out stirring will satisfactorily blend the whole.

Butter should be creamed for a cake before any sugar is added. In cold weather warm the bowl slightly or pour hot water in for a moment, then dry with a towel. When the butter is smooth, pliable and white on the edges add the sugar quickly, and the whole will be light.

Do all the beating before the baking powder is added and gently stir or fold the batter afterward only sufficiently to have the flour worked in smoothly. Water is quite as desirable as milk in mixing batters—indeed, in many instances cake is more delicate and tender if made with water rather than milk.

Gingerbread batter needs no beating, but should be stirred only sufficiently to mix the ingredients to insure the desirable dark, rich look. Gingerbread should never be cut, but broken, apart. A delicious crust is formed on sponge cake if the top is dusted over with powdered sugar just before the cake is put into the oven.

If the flavoring for a cake has been forgotten rub the stated amount of extract over the outside when the cake is lifted from the oven. If it is desired that a loaf cake rise slowly, cover with an inverted pan just fitting the cake tin until the cake has risen as high as possible, letting it remain until the cake is nearly cooked, then remove for browning.—Imogene St. John in Pilgrim.

When a Girl Is Engaged.

The wise girl needs no advice as to how she shall bear herself during the period of her engagement. There is no danger that she will not take it seriously. The risk in her case is that she will be so much burdened down with her new duties that she will lose sight of the lighter and more pleasurable side of it. A man may think it is very charming for awhile to see his fiancee take almost a religious view of the new relationship, but it will not be long before he will crave the everydayness that takes fun as well as solemnity into account.

Fewer girls of this type, however, are found than of the other. There are girls who consider all love affairs more or less as jokes, even those that lead to marriage. In certain sections it used to be the custom not to announce an engagement until a very brief period before the wedding cards were out. Under these circumstances a girl seemed to take a keen pleasure in concealing her new relationship from those about her. I have known of girls who would not hesitate to deny point blank the fact of their betrothal, even within a few weeks of their marriage. I once heard a girl say: "All my fun would be at an end if my engagement were announced. I shall have to live with one man for the rest of my natural life, and I mean to fly about a little before I settle down with him."

One would be tempted to condemn this sort of thing unreservedly were it not that those same flirtatious girls often become the most devoted wives and mothers. But, although there are instances of this kind, it is a decidedly unsafe rule to follow. More than this, it is unkind and unfair to all the parties concerned.—Christine Terhune Herrick in Success.

Drape Your Mirror.

If a woman wishes to see herself in the deception mirror as others see her with the eye or as nearly as possible she should keep the surface of her glass highly polished and have a plentiful supply of white—not cream—gauze or fine Indian lawn. Gather the material at the center of the top and let it fall on either side, framing the glass with soft folds of pure white.

When this is done to artistic satisfaction peep in and see what an improvement it makes to the general appearance. A draped mirror, says Woman's Life, always gives a more becoming reflection than one with a hard frame, and, besides, the white draped mirror and the lace covered toilet table make a dainty spot in a girl's room at all times.

For the Little Woman.

Her object is to look as big as she can, and she frequently succeeds in giving the impression that she is a great deal taller than she is by taking care of the lines of her figure. There is more in the way she holds herself than in the high heels that can be worn; she should hold her head up and her shoulders back. Then much depends upon her skirt. A skirt that is long in front increases her apparent height. Short women should not wear capes, and wide belts are to be avoided. A long waist gives height, and an actress who desired to increase her height managed it by building up the heels inside. Very flat hats should not be worn.

Burnt Match Receiver.

Burnt matches are a source of annoyance to every housewife, and a receptacle for them, placed near the gas, will prove a convenience. This pretty conceit is made from an ordinary fig basket. It is trimmed with green satin ribbon bows and ends and is also suspended by ribbons in the same shade. It is such a simple affair that it can easily be made by even a little girl. An attractive result would be achieved by the addition of a lining of silk harmonizing in color with the ribbons on the basket.

To Mend Glass and China.

To mend glass and china take half a pint of milk and mix with it an equal quantity of vinegar to coagulate the milk. Separate the curds from the whey and mix the latter with the whites of four or five eggs. After beating the mixture very thoroughly add quicklime which has passed through a sieve and make the whole into a thick paste of the consistency of putty. This mixture if carefully applied to broken china or glass or to fissures of any kind and dried properly resists fire or water.

The Kitchen Table Top.

If one cannot have a marble slab for the top of the kitchen table the best covering is zinc. It may be kept clean easier, and servants cannot harm it with the knife when cutting bread and meat. If only table oilcloth can be afforded the tan colored in small check will be found the most serviceable of any, for it will not show stains readily.

Rights and Privileges.

The girl of the future will be definitely obliged to choose between her ever present privileges and her rights. And I would advise her to hang on to her privileges and let her rights go. If you can't get your vote you can always get your voter, and you can influence him in his vote.—Josephine Daskam in Public Opinion.

Soiled Neck Lace.

Lace that has yellowed by contact with the neck—the most stubborn of stains to whiten—may be perfectly cleansed by putting it in lukewarm suds made with white soap, changing the water at least once a day and letting it soak for a week. This treatment will not hurt the most delicate web.

Are Contented Women Scarce?

The contented woman does exist, whatever cynics may say. She has to be hunted out, to be sure, because she does not belong to a large class. She is not numerous and not the least bit obtrusive, and if you find her at all it will be by accident.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A WORNOUT ARGUMENT.

Why "Femininity's Bloom" Will Not Suffer From the Suffrage.

Judge D. Cady Herrick, the recent Democratic candidate for governor of New York state, in expressing himself in opposition to woman suffrage has given what seems to me some very good arguments for it. He is reported to have said:

"From what I have seen at the polls I should hate to see any of the fair ones of my family go there. It is a dreadful thing to think of women, God's finest creations, being brought in contact with such environments. Not but what I believe women are capable of voting with discretion and honesty; it is a mere matter of sentiment, a horror and dislike of seeing the bloom of femininity brushed away by the political life, as would surely occur were women allowed to vote."

If all this be true, what an arraignment against man suffrage and what an argument for woman suffrage! Politics is the science of government, and if men have brought it down to the level of a drunken brawl who is to blame for it and who would be more likely to raise it out of the mire than "God's finest creations," who have always had an uplifting and refining influence upon everything with which they have been connected? Why should politics be an exception?

Judge Herrick frankly admits there are no real arguments against woman suffrage. It is all a "mere matter of sentiment." He believes women capable of voting with discretion and honesty, but fears the "bloom of femininity" will be brushed away should they be given the ballot. This brushing away of "the bloom of femininity" has been the regular stock in trade argument that has been used against every step in the progress of women from higher education to the ballot and in every instance has proved to be a "mere matter of sentiment," with no foundation in fact.

If it is true that men have made politics so corrupt that they fear to have their women come in contact with it is it not high time that something was being done to drag it out of this slough of corruption? And who would be more likely to accomplish the task than the women of this country, who stand for honesty and morality to the greatest extent of any class?

ELNORA MONROE BABCOCK.

An Extra Pair of Lungs.

"I have known aged people, men past eighty, to take their cold baths every morning and be as spry as you please," says Eugene Wood in Everybody's Magazine. "One old fellow used to toddle down to the beach when he had to wade bare legged through the snow two or three blocks. It carried him off at the last, though, for he died just about four weeks before he was eighty-four. And if those of low vitality who ought 'to take the chill off the bath' were to take it ice cold and rub themselves like sixty afterward I don't think their vitality would be low. I think if they got their blood purified by practically adding another pair of lungs to their outfit they would soon be as chipper as anybody."

INSULT TO OUR WOMEN.

Statehood Bill Classifies Them With Illiterates, Lunatics and Criminals.

The leading organizations of women throughout the country are sending protests to their congressmen and the territorial committee of the senate against the bill proposing to unite Oklahoma and Indian Territory into one state under the name of Oklahoma and to combine New Mexico and Arizona territories into a state under the name of Arizona.

The portion of the bill to which the women take exception is found in paragraph 5 of sections 3 and 21, which would allow these states when organized to disfranchise minors, criminals, lunatics, nonresidents, ignoramuses and women. It reads as follows:

"That said state shall never enact any law restricting or abridging the right of suffrage on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude or on account of any other conditions or qualifications, save and except on account of illiteracy, minority, sex, conviction of felony, mental condition or residence."

This not only authorizes the disfranchisement of women, but classes them with the degraded, imbecile and immature of the opposite sex. Such a classification is an insult to American womanhood. The pioneer women of the west who have labored and suffered by their husbands' sides to advance civilization ought not to be so unjustly classed. The congress of the United States ought not to set its seal upon the possibility of the perpetual disfranchisement of these women, an unmerited disgrace and punishment. It is true that in many states women have been tacitly ranked with these defective, delinquent and dependent classes, but never before has the insult been so open and flagrant, nor has it been in an act of congress.

When Man Will Recognize Woman.

Until woman has obtained "that right protective of all other rights, the ballot," this agitation must go on, absorbing the time and the energy of our best and strongest women. Who can measure the advantages that would result if the magnificent abilities of these women could be devoted to the needs of government, society, home, instead of being consumed in the struggle to obtain their birthright of individual freedom? Until this be gained we can never know, we cannot even prophesy the capacity and power of woman for the uplifting of humanity. It may be delayed longer than we think, it may be here sooner than we expect, but the day will come when man will recognize woman as his peer not only at the fireside, but in the councils of the nation. Then, and not until then, will there be the perfect comradeship, the ideal union between the sexes, that shall result in the highest development of the race. What this shall be we may not attempt to define, but this we know—that only good can come to the individual or to the nation through the rendering of exact justice. SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

There is always hope in a man that actually and honestly works.—Carlyle.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

SENATOR JOHN DANIEL of Virginia, who lost a leg at Manassas and who was an ardent champion of Judge Parker at the Democratic national convention, is a wit and a capital story teller. Harper's Weekly credits the following to the senator:

SENATOR JOHN DANIEL.

A gentleman in the south was one day in conversation with a Yankee who had brought letters of introduction from a friend in the north, when it transpired that the northerner was a veteran of the civil war.

"Yes," said the Yankee, "I was a participant in the late unpleasantness. You see this?" he added, pointing to a scar in his face. "I got that at the second battle of Bull Run."

"How in the world did you get hit in the face at the battle of Bull Run?" mischievously asked the southerner.

"Oh," responded the Yankee, with the utmost nonchalance, "I suppose I got careless and looked back."

Hermann Oelrichs, famous as business man, clubman, athlete and sportsman, has won a reputation recently as a poet. Once Mr. Oelrichs was famous as "the handsome bachelor" of New York. Then he married Miss Tessie Fair, daughter of the California bonanza king, whose wedding trousseau was said to have cost the neat sum of $100,000. Mr. Oelrichs is a prince of good fellows, and it was to entertain his associates in a California club that he wrote a revised version of the "House That Jack Built," in honor of the house building attainments of a fellow club member. He had the verses illustrated by an artist and sumptuously bound in vellum in a "limited edition" of 100 copies. Mr. Oelrichs' literary venture made a great hit with his club friends.

In his prime as an athlete Mr. Oelrichs once had the audacity to challenge John L. Sullivan to a boxing match. It was at the time when Sullivan's mighty fist had swept all men before him. Oelrichs was then a leading light in the Racquet club, New York. A member of his club, which included some excellent amateur boxers, visited Sullivan and informed him that one of their number wished to try conclusions with him at a private contest before a half dozen men.

HERMANN OELRICHS.

"Who's d' sucker?" mildly inquired Sullivan. "Oelrichs," was the reply.

Sullivan grew serious. "Oelrichs?" said he. "I hear he's good wid his hands."

"Oh, so so," was the noncommittal rejoinder.

The strong boy thought long and deeply. Then the genius of common sense asserted sway over his mind.

"Count me out," he said; "they ain't nothin' in that game for me."

"Why?"

"W'y? Cos if I lick him I on'y get a couple er t'ousand cases, an' dat don't cut no figure wid me, an' it don't do me no good. An' if he licks me, w'y, I'm done, I'm a no good. Say, I'll fight anybody, but no gentlemen amachoors for yours truly, John L. Sullivan."

Arthur T. Hadley, the genial president of Yale university, always keeps on unusually good terms with the small boys of his neighborhood. In his encounters with the little Yankees of New Haven the distinguished professor, however, sometimes comes off second best, says the New York Herald. Only the other day—and he tells the story himself—Mr. Hadley chanced to pass a little urchin who turned to look up curiously at the tall figure.

PRESIDENT HADLEY.

"Hello, boy!" called President Hadley. "What time is it by your nose?"

The little chap was ready for him.

"Dunno," came the retort. "Mine ain't runnin'. Is yours?"

James Speyer, head of the New York banking house of Speyer & Co., has given financial circles something to talk about in his negotiations with the Mexican government, by which he has arranged to finance the new Mexican $40,000,000 gold loan. The deal is regarded as marking an epoch in international finance. Mr. Speyer is one of the most prominent of the younger financial leaders in New York. He is noted for his interest in art and in practical philanthropies, such as social settlements and educational work among the poor. He and his wife gave $100,000 to the Teachers' college of Columbia university, with which a model public school is being erected in connection with the college, to be conducted as a part of its school system. Mr. Speyer has a beautiful residence, called Waldheim, at Scarboro, on the Hudson, which has a colonial dining room with a frieze in tapestry illustrating historical events. Mr. Speyer was born in New York in 1861 and is the son of Gustavus Speyer, who in 1845, with his brother Philip, founded the banking business since conducted by the family. Mr. James Speyer is a director in the Pacific Mail Steamship company and the Southern Pacific Railway company. He is also connected with several other corporations and is a popular clubman.

JAMES SPEYER.

Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge, K. C. B., appointed by Premier Balfour to conduct the investigation into the firing of the Russian fleet on British trawlers in the North sea, has been in Great Britain's navy fifty years, his last command being the China station. Since he has been out of active service Sir Cyprian has occupied several important admiralty posts. He is now a bluff veteran of threescore and five. During the Indian mutiny he was with the British squadron in the bay of Bengal, and he served with the naval brigade in Burma. Of late years he has been best known in British naval circles as an expert on ordnance. He became a rear admiral in 1892, a vice admiral six years later and an admiral when he retired. Admiral Dewey, who is talked of as one of the international commissioners who are to weigh the evidence concerning the North sea affair, is two years older than Admiral Bridge.

ADMIRAL BRIDGE.

The oldest statue in the world, a marble image of Daddu, which was recently unearthed on the site of Babylon, is said to closely resemble Senator Chauncey M. Depew of New York. His term as junior senator will expire in March, 1905, and he is a candidate for re-election. He is in his seventy-first year and still loves a good story even when it is told at his own expense. A new Depew story told by the New York Herald is an amusing variation of the ancient theme of the prophet in his own country. The senator, in great haste, had boarded a Forty-second street car to catch a train from the Grand Central station. To his embarrassment he found himself without a penny of change. He sought the conductor.

SENATOR DEPEW.

"I am Chauncey Depew," he explained. "I must catch a train in four minutes, and I haven't any fare."

"That won't go here!" snarled the conductor.

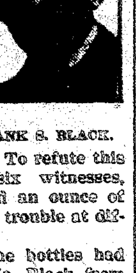
"I beg your pardon," was the good natured rejoinder. "Here's my card. Come to my office tomorrow, and I will give you $5."

"Naw. Nothin' doin'."

"But I am Senator Depew. If you will only"—

"See here," said the conductor, "it won't work. I don't care if you're Chauncey Olcott, you've got to pay your fare on this car."

Ex-Governor Frank S. Black, who, without fee, will attempt to save from the scaffold Caleb Powers of Kentucky, the alleged murderer of Governor Goebel, is one of the cleverest lawyers in New York, an orator of national reputation and a wit. He is tall and gaunt, and his striking physique has often caused him to be likened to Abraham Lincoln. When he was conducting his successful defense of Roland B. Molineux, accused of being a poisoner, several years ago, the state based its whole case upon the theory that cyanide of mercury—the poison with which Mrs. Adams, Molineux's alleged victim, was killed—is a rare poison and cannot be obtained except by an experienced chemist. To refute this Mr. Black produced six witnesses, each of whom displayed an ounce of the stuff bought without trouble at different drug shops.



FRANK S. BLACK.

When the sixth of the bottles had been handed back to Mr. Black from the juryman who wanted to examine them the ex-governor stood for a moment with his hands full.

"Well, governor, what are you going to do with them?" asked Assistant District Attorney Osborne.

Mr. Black looked quizzically at his opponent and then down at the poison he held—enough to kill fifty persons.

"I think," said Mr. Black, "I shall give them to the prosecution."

Commander Robert E. Peary is not tired of polar exploration yet. He is planning another expedition northward. The ship in which he is to make the voyage is already under construction, and he expects to start about the 1st of July, 1905. Commander Peary holds that, while his previous expeditions have not led to the discovery of the pole, they have been fruitful of much valuable information. Thus he is encouraged to keep on and hopes to achieve his ambition and find the goal so many before him have sought. The next expedition will follow the so called American route.

R. E. PEARY.

Value of Mutton On the Farm

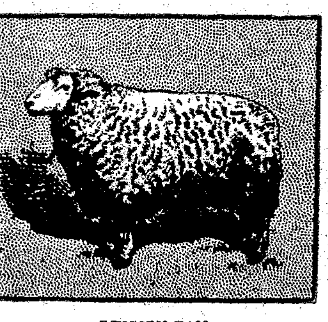
No class of farm stock is so well fitted to furnish the farmer with fresh meat at any season of the year as sheep unless it be fowls, says Professor Thomas Shaw in American Sheep Breeder. In areas where the winters are cold the farmer may have fresh beef or fresh pork all the winter in the frozen form; not so, however, farther south. There winters are too warm, but they are not too warm to interfere with the keeping of a sheep unsalted until it is consumed. Both north and south, but especially north, mutton can be kept in ice houses in the summer season with a suitable chamber in the same.

Some persons claim that beef is the best meat that any person can eat. Others wax eloquent in behalf of poultry. To the mind of the writer there is no meat that will compare with a roast of tender, well grown lamb, whether eaten warm or cold, especially when it has been grown quickly on a variety of grasses and other foods such as usually abound on every arable farm. It is a dish fit for a king, and it is one that every farmer can now and then enjoy. It seems a real privation to bring up a family in ignorance of the character of such meat and to require them at the same time to eat salt pork until they tire of such a diet because of its continuity.

One of the most pleasing features of this home supply of mutton is its cheapness. It is obtained in a sense without cost other than the labor involved in caring for the sheep, where they are kept simply for the purpose of supplying food. As I have said frequently before, they pick up their living from what would otherwise be wasted, and in doing this they destroy so many weeds that they more than pay for the labor involved in caring for them. It would mean something to the revenues of the farms if as many sheep were added to the aggregate now in the United States for the purpose simply of providing meat—good, wholesome, delicious meat—on the farms. It means a great deal when it is claimed that the board of these sheep could be virtually obtained for nothing, and it means considerably more when it is claimed that the weeds destroyed by these sheep would more than pay for the labor of caring for them.

Lincoln Sheep.

A Pennsylvania correspondent of American Agriculturist says that in his opinion the Lincoln is superior to all other breeds of sheep in fineness and weight of fleece, hardiness and vitality. They clip on an average sixteen pounds each, and there are records of their having clipped from twenty to twenty-three pounds each. Ewes at two years old weigh from 200 to 225 pounds and bucks 225 to 280 pounds.



LINCOLN RAM.

Lambs one day old weigh from sixteen to twenty pounds. They differ from the Leicesters in having shorter legs and wool all over the body except the legs and forehead. They have a dotted or mottled ear and are very much more prolific and hardy.

Scours In Pigs.

Scours being a disease due largely to bad dietetics and hygiene, the preventive treatment is of more importance than the medicinal. This consists in correcting errors in feeding and care. At the time of farrowing the sow should be fed a light, easily digested ration, the pen kept clean and dry and the pigs allowed plenty of exercise and pure air. If the scours are due to a feverish condition of the mother or to irritating food she should be given two or three ounces of castor oil. To check the scours in the pigs a few drops of laudanum can be placed on the tongue or a large dose (from one-half to one tablespoonful) administered to the sow. This should be repeated if necessary.—Indiana Experiment Station.

Best Breed of Hogs.

The best breeds of hogs are those from which we can secure the maximum of growth in six to eight months under given conditions. Some breeds are better suited to continuous feeds upon concentrated rations than others. Some bear close confinement much better than others. The smaller breeds are not wanted by the packers, while many farmers prefer these "chunks."—Farm and Ranch.

Slobbering Horses.

Slobbering is the result of something that irritates the mouth, such as the bit, sharp teeth cutting the cheeks or tongue or the food the animal is eating. Medicines are of no use in such cases. Have the mouth examined by a veterinarian and the cause removed if possible.—American Agriculturist.

Feeding Angora Bucks.

Care should be taken in feeding the bucks. Don't overfeed them, says Wool Markets and Sheep. One pint of corn or wheat at a feeding is sufficient, with plenty of hay and roughage. If overfed they are liable to become foundered.

The Day of the Doer.

Time was when "Has Been" was accepted and respected for the sake of what he had done. Not so today.

"Am Now" has introduced himself and is the lion of the hour.

No one cares what has been done. The world is too busy keeping in touch with the "Doer" to bother about the "Done."

Maybe you composed an opera yesterday. No one cares. What are you composing now?

You tell us that your last year's picture was the success of the day. Yes, of that day, but that day is gone. What are you painting now?

Nor does the world care for promise. It accepts not the bud, but the blossom.

The "Will Be" is no more welcome among the world's workers than is the "Has Been."

You may be about to sing a beautiful melody which promises to ring down the ages. Nobody cares. Sing it. The world cannot afford to think about unsung melodies.

The world has room for the "Doer" only; the "Nower" is the rage.

This is an age of "Do, we must be shown!"

It is an age of now, an age of today. It recognizes no yesterday. There is no tomorrow.—New York World.

Keeping Up Your Courage.

There is first the belief that we are well and capable of continuing so. That is nothing more than faith in our own human powers. It is a faith that every self respecting person should have. Do not abuse the organs of the body, and then there will be no necessity of thinking of them and wondering if they are working all right. By dwelling too much upon some weakness we can always aggravate it through nervous reaction. This in some cases can become such a confirmed habit that serious troubles will be induced. There are many patients in the world today who might be up and around, enjoying good health, if they but willed that they should do so. They are invalids through lack of force of character, for will makes character of one sort or another.—Household Ledger.

Good Comfort.

The most solid comfort one can fall back upon is the thought that the business of one's life—the work at home after the holiday is done—is to help in some small nibbling way to reduce the sum of ignorance, degradation and misery on the face of this beautiful earth.—George Eliot.

Discretion.

Mothers everywhere praise One Minute Cough Cure for the sufferings it has relieved and the lives of their little ones it has saved. A certain cure for coughs, croup and whooping cough. A. L. Spafford, Postmaster, of Chester, Mich., says: "Our little girl was unconscious from strangulation during a sudden and terrible attack of croup. One Minute Cough Cure relieved and cured her and I cannot praise it too highly." One Minute Cough Cure relieves coughs, makes breathing easy, cuts out phlegm, draws out inflammation and removes every cause of a cough and strain on lungs. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. The Editor's Gentleman.

The question always comes up: What is a gentleman? Some say he is a man with a silk hat, and others a man with a smooth tongue. But men connected with the newspaper trade have a canon of their own.

"Mr. Editor," said a patron one day, "how is it you never call on me to pay for your paper?"

"Oh," said the man of types, "we never ask a gentleman for money."

"Indeed!" the patron replied. "How do you manage to get along when they don't pay?"

"Why," said Mr. Editor, "after a certain time we conclude he is not a gentleman, and we ask him."—London Mail.

Poison For Cholera Victims.

"Some years ago I found myself in the city of Buenos Ayres at a time when the cholera was raging in that capital," said a traveler.

"It happened that as I walked along a public thoroughfare one day while the plague was at its height I saw a man fall to the ground, and I surmised that he had been stricken with the dread disease. Before reaching him I noticed a policeman approach the unfortunate and administer a drink to him from a bottle which I had no doubt contained a restorative or some kind of medicine. At the same time the policeman blew his whistle for an ambulance.

"The vehicle came very quickly, and yet before it arrived the man was dead, and it was a corpse that was removed. I remarked to the officer that the medicine had been of no avail. 'Certainly not, senor,' he answered; 'it was not medicine I gave him, but a deadly poison. That is the way we have to do now to check the spread of the cholera.' Besides, the man would soon have died anyway.

"I never experienced a deeper feeling of horror in my life and looked on the policeman in the light of a murderer. Yet he doubtless regarded what he had done as in the nature of a disagreeable necessity, and, politely bidding me adieu, went his way."—Washington Post.

Tulip and Poppy Dangerous Flowers.

The florist held a tulip in his hand. "Some people claim that a tulip has no smell," he said. "As a matter of fact, it has a dangerous smell. Take a tulip of a deep crimson color and inhale it with profound inspiration, and it will be apt to make you light headed. You will say and do queer things—dance, sing, fight, swear and so on. For two hours you will cut up in this way. Afterward you will be depressed.

"The poppy is another dangerous flower. A young woman of a nervous temperament, if she lingers among a bed of poppies, will grow drowsy, the same as if she had smoked a pipe or two of opium. In Asia Minor, where the opium manufacturers cultivate vast fields of poppies, tourists inspecting the beautiful flowers often become altogether incapacitated. They get so sleepy they can hardly talk. They reel in their gait. In some cases they have to be put to bed."—Boston Advertiser.

Indians' Nose Breathing.

An English scientist thinks it unnecessary that children should be taught to breathe through the nostrils only and maintains that they cannot do so under the stress of active exertion. London Hospital thinks otherwise. Among the North American aborigines at a time when they were capable of extraordinary physical exertion the precept "to shut your mouth" was enforced upon the young by the most severe discipline.

Catlin founded upon his experiences among the American tribes a curious book upon the subject. After depicting open mouthed men and boys in every variety of ugliness and stupidity, he says that he refrains from giving illustrations of the fairer sex and would only remind them, while counseling them to be careful about closure of the mouth at night, that "idiots asleep cannot be angels awake."

The scientist declares that not all nostrils are sufficiently wide to permit of breathing being conducted through them to the exclusion of the mouth, but it is certain that nothing would tend more than breathing through them to promote their development.

A Heavy Load.

To lift that load off of the stomach take Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It digests what you eat. Sour stomach, belching, gas on stomach and all disorders of the stomach that are curable, are instantly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. S. P. Storrs, a druggist at 297 Maine street, New Britain, Conn., says: "Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is giving such universal satisfaction and is so surely becoming the positive relief and subsequent cure for this distressing ailment, I feel that I am always sure to satisfy and gratify my customers by recommending it to them. I write this to show how well the remedy is spoken of here." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure was discovered after years of scientific experiments and will positively cure all stomach troubles. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Witchcraft.

Three centuries ago the great statute of James I. came into operation. It made felons without benefit of clergy all who "shall use, practice or exercise any injuration or conjuration of any evil and wicked spirit, or shall consult, covenant with, entertain, employ, feed or reward any evil and wicked spirit to or for any intent or purpose, or take up any dead man, woman or child out of his, her or their grave or any other place where the dead body resteth, or the skin, bone or any part of any dead person, to be employed or used in any manner of witchcraft, enchantment, charm or sorcery, whereby any person shall be killed, destroyed, wasted, consumed, pined or lamed in his or her body or any part thereof." Under this act witches were executed for more than a century.

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

New Way of Using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Mr. Arthur Chapman, writing from Durban, Natal, South Africa, says: "As a proof that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a cure suitable for old and young, I pen you the following: A neighbor of mine had a child just over two months old. It had a very bad cough and the parents did not know what to give it. I suggested that if they would get a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and put some upon the dummy teat the baby was sucking it would no doubt cure the child. This they did and brought about a quick relief and cured the baby." This remedy is for sale by H. C. Giesler.

The Sikhs' Five K's.

General Gordon, a British officer who has written a book on the Sikhs, the celebrated fighters of India, says that the signs by which you may know a Sikh are these: He never cuts his hair, but wears his beard looped up over his ears; he never smokes nor touches tobacco, because that is the privilege of the Mohammedan, but he is allowed to drink spirits and is a great consumer of opium. Finally, he must have about his person the five K's, which General Gordon thus enumerates: Kes, long hair of the head, as the Sikh must never cut his hair or beard; kangi, comb to secure the hair tied up in a knot on top of the head; kacch, breeches reaching to the knee; kard, knife, and kirpan, sword.

His Apology.

When George III. was crowned king of England the ceremonies were marred by certain blunders for which Lord Effingham, earl marshal, was responsible. Lord Effingham saw fit afterward to apologize to the king. "There will be no such blunders at the next coronation, your majesty," said he. King George had a sufficiently strong sense of humor to laugh.

The Pound of Flesh Story.

Eleven different versions of the pound of flesh story exist in the early literature of Europe, none of which is founded on a historical basis, save one related by the biographer of Pope Sixtus V. The original tale runs as follows: Simon Cenada, a Jew, enters into a wager with Sechi, a Christian, staking a pound of his flesh against a large sum of money of the Christian. The Jew loses the wager, and Sechi insists on his forfeit. The case is referred to the governor of the city, who in turn places it before the pope, who condemns both to lifelong imprisonment, from which they are finally released on the payment of a heavy fine. An Italian, Giovanni Florentino, in the sixteenth century was the first to change the roles of the Jew and Christian, and in this altered form the Bard of Avon found the story. The poet himself could scarcely have known any Jews personally, since they were expelled from England 300 years before his time and were not readmitted until after his death. From stage presentations, from descriptions in books or from popular reports, which were always derogatory to the Jewish character, the poet derived his knowledge of the Jew.—Menorah.

The Lobster's Claws.

If you take the trouble when you save up money enough and purchase a lobster to notice the claws you will observe that each is peculiar and quite materially differs from the other. One claw is a scissors, the other a mill; one is a cutter, the second a cracker.

Practically a lobster has ten legs, but of these only eight are used in walking. Of these ten legs the front pair, the claws, are employed in seizing and crushing its prey. Generally the right claw is the more slender and longer and has sharp teeth on its edges, while the other has no teeth, but blunt tubercles, or hammers. This left claw is operated by stronger muscles. Sometimes, however, the scissors claw is the left one and the hammer, or crusher, claw is the right.—Kennebec Journal.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Is Pleasant to Take.

The finest quality of granulated loaf sugar is used in the manufacture of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and the roots used in its preparation give it flavor similar to maple syrup, making it quite pleasant to take. Mr. W. L. Roderick, of Poolesville, Md., in speaking of this remedy, says: "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy with my children for several years and can truthfully say it is the best preparation of the kind I know of. The children like to take it and it has no injurious after effect. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

Dance Auction Day.

A custom that has existed for some centuries is still maintained in certain towns on the lower Rhine. Early in the year—on auction day—the town crier or clerk calls all the young people together and, having chosen attractive maidens, sells to the highest bidders the privilege of dancing with them, and them only, during the entire year. The fees go into the public poor box.

There is always hope in a man that actually and honestly works.—Carlyle.

A Victim of Small Beer.

A correspondent sends to the London Public Opinion the following quaint epitaph on what is known as "Thetcher's Stone" at Winchester, England: "In memory of Thomas Thetcher, a grenadier in the North regiment of Hants militia, who died of violent fever contracted by drinking small beer when hot the 12th of May, 1764, aged twenty-six years. In grateful remembrance of whose universal good will toward his comrades this stone is placed here at their expense, as a small testimony of their regard and concern.

Who caught his death by drinking cold small beer.
Soldiers, be wise from his untimely fall
And when you're hot drink strong or none at all.

"An honest soldier never is forgot,

ON THE ROAD TO CENTERVILLE

[Original.]

A countryman stood in the door of a tavern in the far west looking out on a pair of horses hitched to a wagon standing in the road. Turning to several loungers about the bar, he asked:

"Any gent goin' to Centerville?"

"I'm a-goin' that way. Reckon I'll go with you," said a lounger.

A medium sized, compactly built man with a restless eye and a springy step got up from his chair, counted out some money to the landlord, said "Morin', gents," to those present, went out with the farmer and got up along side of him on the spring seat.

"Much obleeged to you for comin' along," remarked the farmer as he drove off. "There's been a turrible lot o' holdups rounds here lately. I don't like goin' alone very much."

"Why don't the committee stop it?" asked the passenger.

"Stop it! The committee can't do nothin'."

The passenger chuckled. "Why not?" he asked.

"'Cause the work's all done by Tom Flint, I reckon, and it would take a dozen committees to do anything with him. They say he's mighty slippery."

"Tom Flint hasn't done no holdin' up. He isn't so low down as that."

"You don't mean it."

"There's nothin' the matter with Flint. He won't hurt nobody that don't want to hurt him."

"How do you know that?"

"Know it! I'll prove it. I'm Tom Flint myself."

The farmer quickly moved to the far end of the seat, looked sidewise at his passenger and exclaimed:

"Great Scott!"

Flint seemed disposed to make good his words, riding so peacefully beside the farmer that the latter gradually assumed an appearance of confidence, and the two fell to chatting. Flint told how he began his shooting career and how easy it seemed after he had killed the first man.

"How did it seem when you killed the last one?" asked the farmer.

Flint winced. "Tucker?" he said. "Well, I didn't want to kill Tucker, but he took my gal away from me."

"Did she prefer you to Tucker?"

"Well, no, I can't say she did, but s' long as I couldn't git her I didn't intend that Tucker should have her."

"They saw she tuk on mighty bad when he died."

Again Flint winced, but said nothing.

"Was they goin' to be married soon?" asked the farmer.

"Married! They was married."

The words were spoken with a good deal of feeling, and the countryman pressed the subject no further. Something was wrong with the hames on the near horse. They were slipping back off the collar. The farmer drew rein.

"Reckon I'll git down and tighten them hames," he said. "Will you hold the lines, Mr. Flint?"

Instead of holding the lines Flint jumped down off the seat and went forward to fix the hames. He tightened the strap, the horse's neck meanwhile being between him and the countryman. When he had finished and looked up at the farmer a great change had come. The "hayseed" held a revolver in each hand, and each revolver was pointed directly at Flint's head.

"Hands up!"

The astonished Flint did not comply with alacrity, whereupon the farmer repeated the order with a finger pressed close on each trigger. Flint raised his hands. He looked puzzled. A number of persons were interested in his capture, but he couldn't make out which one of them the farmer was. Flint was perfectly cool. Indeed he counted on an opportunity for one of the quick moves for which he was famous. They were alone, far from any habitation, and there would be plenty of time.

"Who are you?" he asked the farmer, "a sheriff?"

"No."

"One of the committee?"

"No."

"Then who are you?"

"Tom Tucker. Bill Tucker's brother."

A tinge of white spread itself over Flint's face.

"I was there when Bill was brought in," continued Tucker, "and saw my own brother, who I'd gone around with when we were little shavers with our arms around each other's necks, laid low by the man who wanted his wife, and I saw the little girl crazed by it. If I could 'a' found you then, Tom Flint, you'd 'a' got the better of me, for I was reckless. Lucky I didn't. When I cooled off some I went to work on the sly. You'd never seen me, and that gave me an advantage. I tracked you to the tavern and knew you were goin' to Centerville. I borrowed this rig and these clothes. The guns I had already. You remember, in the fracas with Bill you dropped one of yours. Well, this right one is the one you dropped. Now turn about while I disarm you."

Flint hesitated. He was desperate and meditated some desperate move, but he looked into his adversary's eye and concluded to comply with the order.

"Now walk on," said Tucker, after disarming him.

Flint marched on, covered every moment by one or the other of Tucker's revolvers. The doomed man knew that it was death by the committee or death by Tucker. With the committee there would be no chance, while Tucker [illegible]. Flint waited till the road [illegible] a wood, then darted aside [illegible] with the revolver in his [illegible]

IN THE DAIRY

Professor D. W. May of the Kentucky experiment station is the author of a recent bulletin on the feeding of dairy cows, which may be summarized as follows:

Select cows of dairy type. While pure bred dairy animals will bring a higher price they will also tend more to produce the dairy type and are therefore recommended.

Take strict account of the cost of milk and butter from each individual cow of the herd, so that the unprofitable ones may be culled out.

Exercise and pure air are very essential to the best results from milk cows, but exposure to severe weather, especially cold rains, should be avoided.

Feed to get the larger amount of milk with profit. The yield of milk and thereby the yield of butter is greatly influenced by the amount and character of the feed, the percentage of fat remaining fairly constant.

Increase the amount and the length of the season of pasture, for they represent profitable gain in dairying.

Study the profit in grain feeding in order to avoid giving more grain than the value of the resulting increase yield. Our leading grain ration is a combination of ground corn and bran. This ration may under some circumstances be made better or cheaper by the addition of certain byproducts of cereal and oil mills.

For Sore Teats.

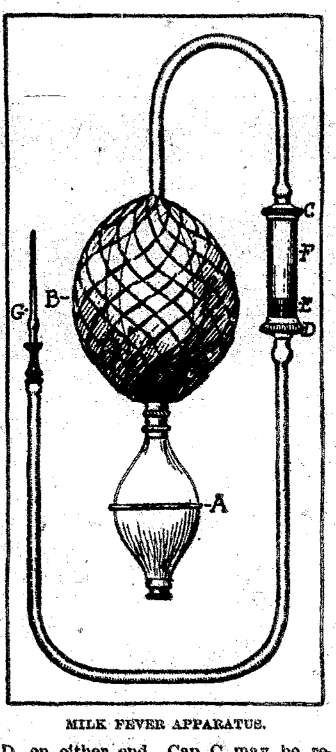
Most farmers are acquainted with the difficulty in milking the cow that cut her teats on the barbed wire fence. A little lard put on the cut a few moments before milking will so soften it that the cow will give the milker no trouble.

Consider the Cow.

Before you kick the cow for not standing still while you milk think how the cow feels about the milking process.

Air Treatment For Milk Fever.

The method of injecting air into the udder, says a bulletin of the department of agriculture, is easy of manipulation, requires but little time and is readily accomplished by means of a milk fever apparatus, such as is here illustrated. It consists of a metal cylinder, F, with milled screw caps, C and



MILK FEVER APPARATUS.

D, on either end. Cap C may be removed in order to place sterile absorbent cotton within the chamber. To this cap the rubber bellows, A and B, are connected by nine inches of rubber tubing. Cap D is to be removed, together with the attached eighteen inches of rubber hose, at the free end of which is the self retaining milking tube, G, for the purpose of disinfection before treating each case. The pulling on or off of the tubing on the nozzles of the milled caps is thus rendered unnecessary. Within the metal cylinder at E is a wire net, which prevents the obstruction of the outlet of the chamber by holding back the sterile cotton and also permits the unscrewing of the lower cap and the disinfection of this portion of the apparatus, including the milking tube, without contaminating the packing. Absorbent cotton impregnated with carbolic acid (carbolized cotton) or other suitable disinfectant can be purchased from the drug trade in most localities and is better though slightly more expensive than the plain cotton.

The Water Supply.

The water used in dairy work is mostly an unknown quantity, says a correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman. A hole is dug or a pipe driven into the ground, and the water obtained is used without any question as to its suitability for butter making or quality for boiler use. Every step in dairy practice calls for water, pure water without any question as to its freedom from contamination with organic matter or an excessive amount of minerals, yet almost invariably no attention is paid to its quality so long as it tastes and smells right. Taste and smell are poor tests for the quality of water. It may be contaminated with sewage to a dangerous extent and yet be bright and sparkling, of good flavor and without odor.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

MAKING UP.

When Little Brother's Sorry After Making Sister Angry.

When little brother's sorry,
At first he pouts awhile,
And then about his dimpled mouth
There grows a tiny smile.
He looks at sister sidewise,
And, creeping very near,
He offers her his rocking horse,
The toy he holds most dear!

MAKING UP.

But sister shakes her flaxen head.
"Why, then," he cries, "my kite?
My knife? My candy lion?
(I've only had one bite!)
You won't have any toys at all?
Why, then, I'll give you—this!
Because, you see, I'm sorry,
So, sister, take a kiss!"

PLAYING TURTLE.

A Game In Which Every One Is "It" at the Same Time.

Any number may play the game of turtle, and no one player is "it," for all are "it" together. The game begins by each choosing the kind of turtle he intends to be. One perhaps is a land tortoise, another a snapper, another a mud turtle and so on. Then they all sit in a row, resting their chins on their knees, and each holding his left ankle with his right hand and his right ankle with his left hand. This is a very difficult position to keep. At a given signal the turtles start for a goal a short distance away.

It is the object of the game for the turtles to waddle to the goal and back to the starting point without removing their hands from their feet. Many let go before the proper moment; the others shout "dead turtle" and keep on, leaving their unfortunate companion in the background. The rules of the game demand that he wait there until the first successful racer reaches him on his way back and touches him with his elbow, by which he is supposed to instill new life into the poor dead turtle. The latter immediately starts out again and finishes in the best style he can. As there are always several dead turtles, he is never lonely in his effort to succeed. The winner is, of course, the one who returns to the starting place first.

Japanese Legend About an Insect.

A curious tradition exists about a strange insect which is found only in Himeji, a pretty little town near the center of Japan. It seems there once lived a rich noble in a castle on the outskirts of the town who was famous for the magnificence of his dishes, among which were ten bowls of solid gold. In his employ was a maidservant, O-Kiku, to whom was intrusted the care of the plate. One day a gold dish was missing. She searched diligently, but in vain, and in despair drowned herself in a well. Her ghost returned each night to the spot and could be heard counting the dishes slowly with sobs, "Ichi-mai, ni-mai, san-mai, yo-mai, go-mai, roku-mai, chi-chi-ma, ha-chi-mai, ku-mai," to nine, when there would follow a loud, wailing cry, and the uncanny count would begin over again. At last the uneasy spirit passed into the body of an insect whose head somewhat resembled a ghost with long, tousled hair, and in that part of Japan it is considered unlucky to cultivate the chrysanthemum, as the girl's name, O-Kiku, means chrysanthemum.

The Little Green Man.

A pretty trick may be shown by fashioning a little man or a pillar out of clayey mud mixed with sand. While the figure is still soft press into it seed of water cress which has been soaked for some hours in soft lukewarm water.

When the figure is well covered with seed set it into a plate which is filled with soft lukewarm water mixed with a bit of unslaked lime. Before long the figure will be covered with a beautiful velvety green cloak.

Conundrums.

What request does a cripple make of a dealer in artificial limbs? Re-member me.

Pray find a word, if you are able, that will produce a chair and table? Charitable.

What three letters make a man of a boy? Age.

What is a country seat? A milking stool.

Double Up.

Julia was accustomed to hearing her sister, who studied her spelling lesson at home, say "double e" and "double a." So one day when the primary teacher asked her to read from the board the sentence, "Up, up the kite goes," Julia said confidently:

"Double up the kite goes."

Picked With a Purpose.

"Did you ever notice," asked the hotel clerk yesterday, "how many men there are who make it their business to pick little things, such as threads and specks, off your clothes while standing talking to you? Well, sir, there are lots of them, and that picking is a habit with them. They do it unconsciously. No matter how well brushed you are the man with the habit will begin picking at you when he meets you."

"I've noticed them many a time," said a traveling man standing near, "but I have quit letting them pick at my clothes. I once had an experience with one of those fellows that wasn't pleasant. I had known him slightly and chanced to meet him on the street one day. He began picking specks of dirt and such things from my coat, and he kept it up all the time we talked. A couple of minutes after he had left I missed a $200 diamond pin. That cured me of letting people pick things off my clothes. Nowadays I simply ask the man who tries it to desist. If necessary I hold his hands."—Kansas City Times.

Their First Experience.

A day or two ago a Brooklyn clergyman received an evening call from an elderly man and woman, who expressed a wish to be joined in the bonds of matrimony as quickly as possible.

"Have you ever been married before?" asked the clergyman of the man, a good natured, weather beaten person of seafaring aspect.

"Never, and never wanted to be before," was the prompt reply.

"And have you ever been married before?" the question came to the woman.

"No, sir," she replied with equal promptness. And with a touch of humor that appealed to the clergyman at once she added, "I never had a chance."

The marriage ceremony was speedily performed, and the clergyman refused to take any fee, telling the bride, with a twinkle in his eye, that it had been an unusual privilege to officiate.—New York Press.

Two Passengers.

A negro hack driver in Washington was driving along the street when he encountered a funeral. A long line of coaches was behind the hearse, which was moving along at a lively rate. The negro was superstitious and did not want to cross between the carriages in the funeral procession. He tried to drive around in front of the hearse, but could not make sufficient speed. After driving alongside the hearse for two blocks the negro called out to the driver: "Say, boss, hold up an' let me go past. My passenger is in a hurry and yours isn't."

Quaint Scotch Custom.

Natives of the northeast coast of Scotland observe a curious custom at funerals. After the burial service the coffin is carried outside the house and placed upon the two chairs on which it had rested within doors. As soon as the pallbearers lift up their burden and begin their journey to the graveyard these chairs are at once thrown sharply on their backs. In this position they are kept until the interment has taken place, when they are taken indoors again. Any attempt to place the chairs on their legs or to take them in before the proper time is at once frustrated by the relatives of the dead.

A Locust's Breathing.

Hold a locust between your fingers and watch the breathing movements of the body. Professor Packard says, "There were sixty-five contractions in a minute in a locust which had been held between the fingers about ten minutes." How does that compare with the number of breaths you take each minute? Insects of swiftest flight breathe most rapidly.—St. Nicholas.

Got Her Name Wrong.

"The trouble with you," the doctor said after examining the young man, "seems to be that something is the matter with your heart."

"With my heart?"

"Yes. To give it a name, it is angina pectoris."

"Guess again, doc," said the young man. "That isn't her name at all."

How She Acted.

Holden—When you asked her to marry you did she hide her face on your shoulder and whisper "Yes?" Tilden—On the contrary, she looked me square in the face and remarked, "Not on your life!" Somehow I got the impression that she wouldn't have me.—Boston Transcript.

To Sterilise Drinking Water.

The latest recipe for sterilising drinking water and killing off the typhoid germ: Put four drops of tincture of iodine in half a gallon of water and permit to stand at least half an hour. By the end of that time it will be as harmless as distilled water. Many persons have not the facilities for making distilled water. Boiling it also entails a certain amount of trouble. In either case the water is flat and unpleasant to the taste. The few drops of iodine impart practically no taste to the amount of water they sterilise and the same time they answer every medicinal purpose.—American Queen.

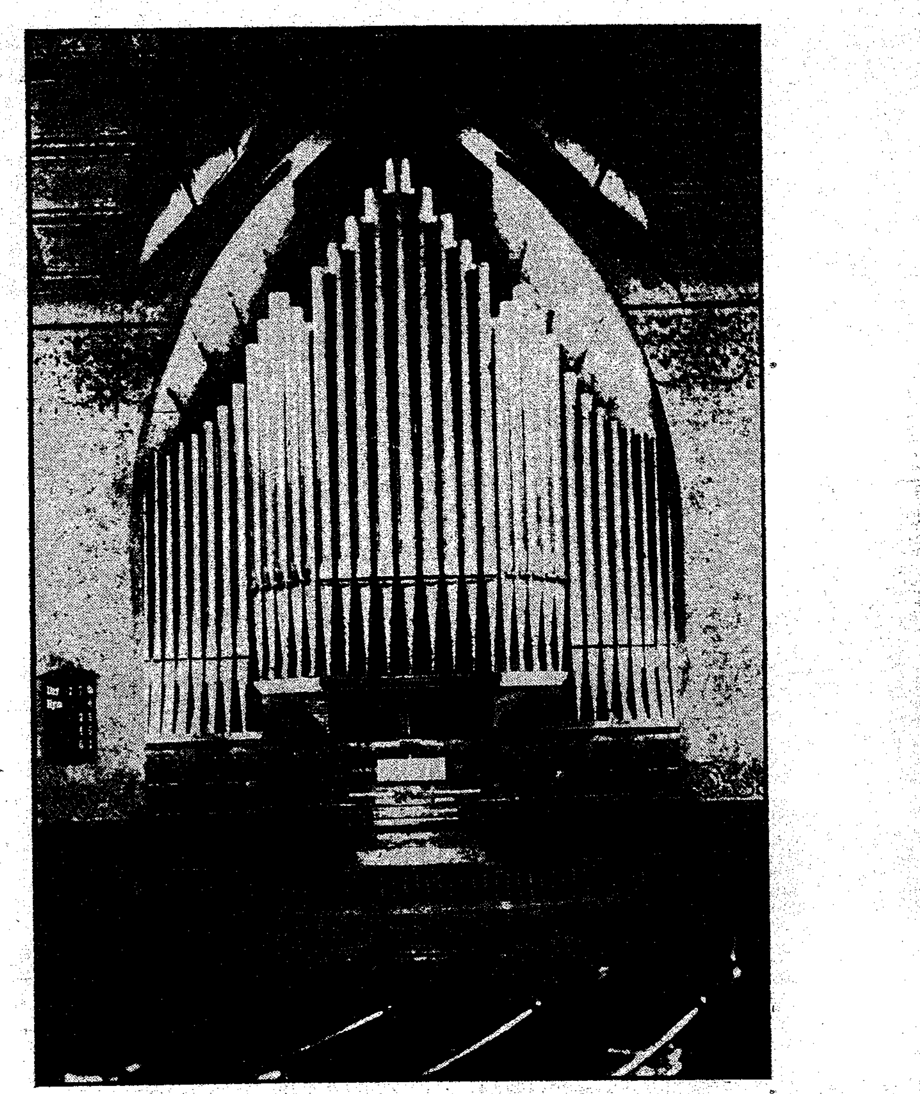
FIRST M. E. CHURCH ORGAN.



The foregoing is an illustration of a magnificent organ which has recently been installed in the First M. E. Church.

The cost of this superb instrument and its installation will probably not exceed $6,000. It was made possible by the generous offer of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who gave $1,500 on condition that the balance of the purchase price should be raised and paid in cash.

The pastor, Rev. John Richards, has been most active in the matter, and the entire membership have heartily co-operated, with the result that success has at last crowned their efforts.

The committee which has had special charge of this matter was composed of Messrs. H. L. Paddock, chairman; W. A. Butts, J. H. Howe, W. H. Patterson, J. H. Hollingsworth, D. E. Lake, F. E. Goodjon, O. Henderson and B. A. Loveless.

The instrument will be a valuable acquisition to the city, and the music-loving people of Fulton will be permitted to hear it to advantage for the first time on Friday evening, Dec. 9, when an inaugural recital will be given by Prof. I. V. Flagler, the renowned concert organist, who has played at the World's Fairs at Chicago, Buffalo and St. Louis.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

Worthy Tribute Paid to the Memory of the Late Samuel Green—His Successor Selected.

A worthy tribute was paid to the memory of an esteemed citizen, the late Samuel Green, last Sunday evening in the First M. E. Church. The plan had its inception in the Pastors' Association of the city, of which Mr. Green was an honored member.

The Rev. W. L. Sawtelle, as president of the association, had the matter in charge, and a most interesting and impressive program was the result.

It was a union service, comprising all the denominational churches of the city, and when the hour appointed arrived, the sacred edifice was crowded to the doors by a large assemblage who sought to honor the memory of the man who had been so consistent a Christian and so useful a member of the community.

The service began with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Sawtelle. After the singing of a hymn, the Rev. A. H Grant read the scriptures and the Rev. S. D. Robinson invoked a blessing on the assemblage.

An appropriate solo, "Come unto me," was rendered in excellent voice by Mrs. L. Fowler Joy.

The purpose of the meeting was explained by Mr. Sawtelle, who introduced the speakers in turn.

The Rev. John Richards spoke on "The personality of Samuel Green." He stated that his first knowledge of Mr. Green's personality came through his pastorate, as he was a member of the First M. E. Church; he was also a local preacher in this conference. Mr. Green's personality, the speaker continued, was unique; he did his own thinking. His life was consecrated to the service and his loyalty to the cause and principle was proverbial. Although of a generous nature, Mr. Green never permitted his impulse to thwart his judgment. Mr. Richards was thankful that he had known Mr. Green and hoped that he might preve an equally true and faithful servant of the Master.

"Mr. Green's work for the public schools," was the subject assigned to Mr. Richard Carr, a member of the Board of Education. Mr. Carr said that his acquaintanceship with Samuel Green dated back about twenty years. It easily and quickly ripened into friendship, Mr. Carr said, "as we came to know and understand each other better; but it was not until three or four years ago that we became at all intimate, and that was when I was honored with a share, at least, of his confidence. It is of these later years of his life, or at least such part of them as was spent in the public service with which I am connected, that I am privileged to speak.

"For many years he had been the truant officer of the Fulton schools—the only one in fact we ever had—and when I became a member of the Board of Education and of its truancy and discipline committee, we were thrown into almost daily contact.

"Nearly all my life I have been connected with schools, or deeply interested in school work, in England and America, and have known many truant officers, but Samuel Green came nearer to being an ideal officer than any other I have met."

The charity, patience, tact and love of the deceased were graphically set forth by the speaker, who stated in conclusion that the Department of Education missed Mr. Green already, and without any disparagement of his successor, it would be many a long day before the Board would be able to find a truant officer more "just, charitable, patient, courageous, tactful and faithful than Samuel Green."

Mr. E. R. Redhead delivered an excellent address on Mr. Green's work as Commissioner of Charities and agent for the Fulton Humane Society. There were two elements to be considered, Mr. Redhead said, in estimating the value of every man's work: First, the motives that actuated him, and, second, the wisdom or common sense exercised in the carrying out of his plans. Although he had known Mr. Green for at least twenty years, he had never heard any one question his integrity of purpose. The deceased possessed common sense to a marvelous degree. He was economical in the expenditure of money, but not parsimoneous, and by the exercise of tact and judgment had saved the city at least $3,000 during his tenure of office. Many cases brought to his attention required rare discrimination; no deserving case was ever turned away; the undeserving avoided him. He did not believe a better selection for the office could have been made by the chief executive of our city.

As agent for the Humane Society, no one was better qualified to discharge his duties. We do well, the speaker continued, to pause for a few moments to honor the memory of such a man. He wrought in his own way—a very human way; lived to a good, round age, as we measure time. Mr. Redhead regretted that Mr. Green could not have been longer spared.

"Mr. Green's attitude toward the enforcement of criminal law," was a subject that was dwelt upon by City Judge Wilson. It was singularly appropriate that Mr. Green's character should be analized from several viewpoints, the speaker said. Mr. Green had been a specialist in many ways. For a layman, he was remarkably well versed in law, but rarely found it necessary to resort to the machinery of the court or make it a convenient tool; before resorting to extreme measures he always counseled and pleaded with the culprit no matter how inexcusable had been the offense. He was broad-minded and believed that there was in every man a spark of divinity that could be rekindled into the image of his maker.

"Past and future of Grace Chapel," was the closing theme. Mr. John Hunter gave an interesting prelude on beneficence [illegible] faith. He then referred to the founding of Grace Chapel by Mr. Green.

"With soap boxes and planks for seats, without respect to creed, color or condition of life, physical or moral, the work was begun and has ever continued; the growth was steady and the interest so manifest that by the grace of Almighty God, and with a faith beautiful in its childlikeness, Mr. Green prayed Grace Chapel into actual existence. * * *

"God only knows of the stupendous amount of work—the ceaseless, never-to-be-counted steps; the anxiety over wayward ones; the new hope grown into radiant joy over one sinner reclaimed, blasted into blackest disappointment by promises only broken once and again to the seventy times seven, to be nourished and encouraged into moral health and strength. * *

"But what of the future? The work must go on. The future of Grace Mission is under the providence of God. It has done a work the church could never do. The same great need exists to-day; saloons, evils untold, abodes of wretchedness, still exist. Only the pure gospel provides a remedy. Fulton needs a place of worship, without a creed or ceremony, to get saved—conducted by common people for common people to learn the way from earth to heaven, and to make a little heaven of their home.

"Is it not a voice of command from the lips of one we loved to go forward? Once more let the banner of the cross be unfurled and in the name of Jesus our king let Grace Chapel stand as it has always stood, for that which is ennobling and uplifting."

The selection of Mr. Charles Atwood to carry on the work was explained by Mr. Hunter. Mr. Green had suggested Mr. Atwood, who had been doing evangelistic work in the Adirondack region, and on the recommendation of business men, Mayor Brooker made him Commissioner of Charities and he also became truant officer.

Basketball, Fulton vs. Jenner's.

The promise of an exciting game of basketball in the City Hall on Thursday evening was fulfilled, and the spectators witnessed a well contested game. Surrogate's Court.

Thomas Chapman, through his attorneys, Hillick & Fanning, has filed a petition in the Surrogate's Court, asking for a final accounting in the estate of Catherine Flood, his mother, who died in Volney, April 5, 1902, leaving $1,200 real and $700 personal property. The will was probated in 1902 and letters testamentary issued to Eleanor Chapman. The petitioner is nineteen years old.

The account filed in the matter of the estate of Amos J. Thayer, who died in Fulton about a year ago, shows that the deceased left an estate amounting to $10,963.33.

Beware of Counterfeits.

"DeWitt's is the only Witch Hazel Salve" writes J. L. Tucker of Centre, Ala. "I have used it in my family for piles, cuts, and burns for years and can recommend it to be the best salve on the market. Every family should keep it, as it is an invaluable household remedy, and should always be kept on hand for immediate use" Mrs. Samuel Gage of North Bush, N. Y. says. "I had a fever sore on my ankle for twelve years that the doctors could not cure. All salve's and blood remedies proved worthless. I could not walk for over two years. Finally I was persuaded to try DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, which has completely cured me. It is a wonderful relief." DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures without leaving a scar. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

COUNTY CLERK LEWIS'S CAREFUL MANAGEMENT.

County Clerk W. E. Lewis has discovered, at the conclusion of footing up the Oswego County Court expenses for the fiscal year, that the past year saw a saving of $937.63 over the previous year, and the major proportion of the amount was saved in the County Court. Last year the expenses of the County Court were $2,749.23 and this year $1,887 26, showing a saving of $861.97.

Politicians in Canada say that it will take two to make a reciprocity treaty, as talked of in the United States. If American delegates appear at Ottawa they will be treated with politeness but indifference as regards reciprocity. Some sort of an arrangement might be had in regard to grain, but that is all. Canada is scouring the world for other markets.

The President's message, which is published in this week's Times, is worthy of careful perusal. The document embraces every phase of administrative and economic questions with which Congress will have to deal and recommendations for their solution. Archbishop Ryan, in his Thanksgiving sermon in Philadelphia, stated that "this great, glorious and brave country had for its chief executive a fearless young chieftain who does his duty without fear or favor to both church and State. More we do not ask and more we could not expect."

Overcoat Satisfaction

If you have always had your overcoat made to measure, you will give your prejudice against ready-to-wear apparel a severe shock by dropping in here and seeing the sweliest overcoats in town, at prices that will not only please but surprise you. We sell the

and there is just as much style, just as much quality, just as good fit, as you would get from the "merchant tailor," and at a price far below the amount he has been charging you.

Here are two of the most popular styles in long coats. They both possess that quality of Schloss "drapery" that is giving other clothing manufacturers much concern In simple language they "hang right," and the way they hang makes them distinctive in style. The "swagger" is correct, the materials perfect. If you want to get away from the ordinary, buy a Schloss Overclad.

[illegible]ENT'S MESSAGE

President Roosevelt's message has been delivered to congress. Its main features are as follows:

The enlargement of scope of the functions of the national government required by our development as a nation involves, of course, increase of expense, and the period of prosperity through which the country is passing justifies expenditures for permanent improvements far greater than would be wise in hard times, but abundant revenues and a large surplus always invite extravagance, and constant care should be taken to guard against unnecessary increase of the ordinary expenses of government.

Capital and Labor.

The relations of capital and labor, and especially of organized capital and organized labor, to each other and to the public at large come second in importance only to the intimate questions of family life. Our peculiar form of government, with its sharp division of authority between the nation and the several states, has been on the whole far more advantageous to our development than a more strongly centralized government. But it is undoubtedly responsible for much of the difficulty of meeting with adequate legislation the new problems presented by the total change in industrial conditions on this continent during the last half century. In actual practice it has proved exceedingly difficult, and in many cases impossible, to get unanimity of wise action among the various states on these subjects. From the very nature of the case this is especially true of the laws affecting the employment of capital in huge masses.

With regard to labor, the problem is no less important, but it is simpler. As long as the states retain the primary control of the police power the circumstances must be altogether extreme which require interference by the federal authorities, whether in the way of safeguarding the rights of labor or in the way of seeing that wrong is not done by unruly persons who shield themselves behind the name of labor. If there is resistance to the federal courts, interference with the mails or interstate commerce or molestation of federal property, or if the state authorities in some crisis which they are unable to face call for help, then the federal government may interfere; but, though such interference may be caused by a condition of things arising out of trouble connected with some question of labor, the interference itself simply takes the form of restoring order without regard to the questions which have caused the breach of order. In the District of Columbia and in the territories the federal law covers the entire field of government. But the labor question is only acute in populous centers of commerce, manufactures or mining. Nevertheless both in the enactment and in the enforcement of law the federal government within its restricted sphere should set an example to the state governments, especially in a matter so vital as this affecting labor.

Labor Unions.

I believe that under modern industrial conditions it is often necessary and even where not necessary it is yet often wise that there should be organization of labor in order better to secure the rights of the individual wageworker. All encouragement should be given to any such organization so long as it is conducted with a due and decent regard for the rights of others. There are in this country some labor unions which have habitually and other labor unions which have often been among the most effective agents in working for good citizenship and for uplifting the condition of those whose welfare should be closest to our hearts. But when any labor union seeks improper ends or seeks to achieve proper ends by improper means all good citizens, and more especially all honorable public servants, must oppose the wrongdoing as resolutely as they would oppose the wrongdoing of any great corporation. Violence, brutality or corruption should not for one moment be tolerated.

Entire Right to Organize.

Wageworkers have an entire right to organize and by all peaceful and honorable means to endeavor to persuade their fellows to join with them in organizations. They have a legal right, which, according to circumstances, may or may not be a moral right, to refuse to work in company with men who decline to join their organizations. They have under no circumstances the right to commit violence upon those, whether capitalists or wageworkers, who refuse to support their organizations or who side with those with whom they are at odds, for mob rule is intolerable in any form.

The wageworkers are peculiarly entitled to the protection and the encouragement of the law. Wherever the national government has power there should be a stringent employer's liability law, which should apply to the government itself where the government is an employer of labor.

Prevention of Railroad Accidents.

The ever increasing casualty list upon our railroads is a matter of grave public concern and urgently calls for action by the congress. The passage of [illegible] requiring the adoption of a block system has been proposed to the [illegible] in that [illegible] limiting the hours of labor for railroad employees in train service upon railroads engaged in interstate commerce and providing that only trained and experienced persons be employed in positions of responsibility connected with the operation of trains.

The safety appliance law, as amended by the act of March 2, 1903, has proved beneficial to railway employees, and in order that its provisions may be properly carried out the force of inspectors provided for by appropriation should be largely increased. This service has passed the experimental stage and should receive generous recognition by the congress.

Unionism in Government Offices.

There is no objection to employees of the government forming or belonging to unions, but the government can neither discriminate for nor discriminate against nonunion men who are in its employment or who seek to be employed under it. Moreover, it is a very grave impropriety for government employees to band themselves together for the purpose of extorting improperly high salaries from the government. Especially is this true of those within the classified service. The letter carriers, both municipal and rural, are as a whole an excellent body of public servants. They should be amply paid. But their payment must be obtained by arguing their claims fairly and honorably before the congress and not by banding together for the defeat of those congressmen who refuse to give promises which they cannot in conscience give. The administration has taken steps to prevent and punish abuses of this nature, but it will be wise for the congress to supplement this action by legislation.

Bureau of Labor.

Much can be done by the government in labor matters merely by giving publicity to certain conditions. The bureau of labor has done excellent work of this kind in many different directions. I shall shortly lay before you in a special message the full report of the investigation of the bureau of labor into the Colorado mining strike, as this is a strike in which certain very evil forces, which are more or less at work everywhere under the conditions of modern industrialism, became startlingly prominent. It is greatly to be wished that the department of commerce and labor, through the labor bureau, should compile and arrange for the congress a list of the labor laws of the various states and should be given the means to investigate and report to the congress upon the labor conditions in the manufacturing and mining regions throughout the country, both as to wages, as to hours of labor, as to the labor of women and children and as to the effect in the various labor centers of immigration from abroad. In this investigation especial attention should be paid to the conditions of child labor and child labor legislation in the several states.

Corporations.

When we come to deal with great corporations the need for the government to act directly is far greater than in the case of labor, because great corporations can become such only by engaging in interstate commerce, and interstate commerce is peculiarly the field of the general government. It is an absurdity to expect to eliminate the abuses in great corporations by state action. It is difficult to be patient with an argument that such matters should be left to the states, because more than one state pursues the policy of creating on easy terms corporations which are never operated within that state at all, but in other states whose laws they ignore. The national government alone can deal adequately with these great corporations. To try to deal with them in an intemperate, destructive or demagogic spirit would in all probability mean that nothing whatever would be accomplished, and with absolute certainty that if anything were accomplished it would be of a harmful nature. The American people need to continue to show the very qualities that they have shown—that is, moderation, good sense, the earnest desire to avoid doing any damage and yet the quiet determination to proceed, step by step, without halt and without hurry, in eliminating or at least in minimizing whatever of mischief or of evil there is to interstate commerce in the conduct of great corporations. They are acting in no spirit of hostility to wealth, either individual or corporate. They are not against the rich man any more than against the poor man. On the contrary, they are friendly alike toward rich man and toward poor man, provided only that each acts in a spirit of justice and decency toward his fellows. Great corporations are necessary, and only men of great and singular mental power can manage such corporations successfully, and such men must have great rewards. But these corporations should be managed with due regard to the interest of the public as a whole. Where this can be done under the present laws it must be done. Where these laws come short others should be enacted to supplement them.

Bureau of Corporations.

The bureau of corporations has made careful preliminary investigation of many important corporations. It will make a special report on the beef industry.

The policy of the bureau is to accomplish the purposes of its creation by co-operation, not antagonism; by making constructive legislation, not destructive prosecution, the immediate object of its inquiries; by conservative investigation of law and fact and by refusal to issue incomplete and hence necessarily inaccurate reports. Its policy being thus one of open inquiry into and not attack upon business, the bureau has been able to gain not only the confidence, but, better still, the co-operation, of men engaged in legitimate business.

The bureau offers to the congress the means of getting at the cost of production of our various great staples of commerce.

Of necessity the careful investigation of special corporations will afford the commissioner knowledge of certain business facts, the publication of which might be an improper infringement of private rights. The method of making public the results of these investigations affords, under the law, a means for the protection of private rights. The congress will have all facts except such as would give to another corporation information which would injure the legitimate business of a competitor and destroy the incentive for individual superiority and thrift.

The bureau has also made exhaustive examinations into the legal condition under which corporate business is carried on in the various states, into all judicial decisions on the subject and into the various systems of corporate taxation in use. I call special attention to the report of the chief of the bureau, and I earnestly ask that the congress carefully consider the report and recommendations of the commissioner on this subject.

The business of insurance vitally affects the great mass of the people of the United States and is national and not local in its application. It involves a multitude of transactions among the people of the different states and between American companies and foreign governments. I urge that the congress carefully consider whether the power of the bureau of corporations cannot constitutionally be extended to cover interstate transactions in insurance.

Rebates.

Above all else we must strive to keep the highways of commerce open to all on equal terms, and to do this it is necessary to put a complete stop to all rebates. Whether the shipper or the railroad is to blame makes no difference. The rebate must be stopped, the abuses of the private car and private terminal track and side track systems must be stopped, and the legislation of the Fifty-eighth congress which declares it to be unlawful for any person or corporation to offer, grant, give, solicit, accept or receive any rebate, concession or discrimination in respect of the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce whereby such property shall by any device whatever be transported at a less rate than that named in the tariffs published by the carrier must be enforced. While I am of the opinion that at present it would be undesirable if it were not impracticable finally to clothe the interstate commerce commission with general authority to fix railroad rates, I do believe that as a fair security to shippers the commission should be vested with the power where a given rate has been challenged and after full hearing found to be unreasonable to decide, subject to judicial review, what shall be a reasonable rate to take its place, the ruling of the commission to take effect immediately and to obtain unless and until it is reversed by the court of review.

Steamship companies engaged in interstate commerce and protected in our coastwise trade should be held to a strict observance of the interstate commerce act.

[The president here discusses the city of Washington, making numerous recommendations looking to its better government. He asks that laws be passed preventing overcrowding in the tenement districts, for the abolition of blind alleys and the proper housing of the poor. He also recommends changes in the criminal code, and would have wife beaters corporally punished.]

Irrigation.

During the two and a half years that have elapsed since the passage of the reclamation act rapid progress has been made in the surveys and examinations of the opportunities for reclamation in the thirteen states and three territories of the arid west. Construction has already been begun on the largest and most important of the irrigation works, and plans are being completed for works which will utilize the funds now available.

The forest policy of the government is just now a subject of vivid public interest throughout the west and to the people of the United States in general. The forest reserves themselves are of extreme value to the present as well as to the future welfare of all the western public land states. They powerfully affect the use and disposal of the public lands. They are of special importance because they preserve the water supply and the supply of timber for domestic purposes and so promote settlement under the reclamation act. Indeed they are essential to the welfare of every one of the great interests of the west.

I have repeatedly called attention to the confusion which exists in government forest matters because the work is scattered among three independent organizations. As I have recommended, all the forest work of the government should be concentrated in the department of agriculture, where the larger part of that work is already done. The Canyon of the Colorado should be made a national park, and the national park system should include the Yosemite and as many as possible of the groves of giant trees in California.

Pensions.

The veterans of the civil war have a claim upon the nation such as no other body of our citizens possess. The pension bureau has never in its history been managed in a more satisfactory manner than is now the case.

Consular Service.

Our consular system needs improvement. Salaries should be substituted for fees, and the proper classification, grading and transfer of consular officers should be provided. I am not prepared to say that a competitive system of examinations for appointment would work well, but by law it should be provided that consuls should be familiar, according to places for which [illegible] or Spanish language and should possess acquaintance with the resources of the United States.

It is desirable to enact a proper national quarantine law.

I call your attention to the great extravagance in printing and binding government publications and especially to the fact that altogether too many of these publications are printed.

Currency.

The attention of the congress should be especially given to the currency question and that the standing committees on the matter in the two houses charged with the duty take up the matter of our currency and see whether it is not possible to secure an agreement in the business world for bettering the system. The committees should consider the question of the retirement of the greenbacks and the problem of securing in our currency such elasticity as is consistent with safety. Every silver dollar should be made by law redeemable in gold at the option of the holder.

Merchant Marine.

I especially commend to your immediate attention the encouragement of our merchant marine by appropriate legislation.

The growing importance of the orient as a field for American exports drew from my predecessor, President McKinley, an urgent request for its special consideration by the congress. The importance of securing proper information and data with a view to the enlargement of our trade with Asia is undiminished. Our consular representatives in China have strongly urged a place for permanent display of American products in some prominent trade center of that empire, under government control and management, as an effective means of advancing our export trade therein. I call the attention of the congress to the desirability of carrying out these suggestions.

Immigration and Naturalization.

In dealing with the questions of immigration and naturalization it is indispensable to keep certain facts ever before the minds of those who share in enacting the laws. First and foremost, let us remember that the question of being a good American has nothing whatever to do with a man's birthplace any more than it has to do with his creed. In every generation from the time this government was founded men of foreign birth have stood in the very foremost rank of good citizenship, and that not merely in one but in every field of American activity.

There is no danger of having too many immigrants of the right kind, but the citizenship of this country should not be debased. It is vital that we should keep high the standard of well being among our wageworkers, and therefore we should not admit masses of men whose standards of living and whose personal customs and habits are such that they tend to lower the level of the American wageworker, and above all we should not admit any man of an unworthy type. Similarly we should take the greatest care about naturalization. Fraudulent naturalization, the naturalization of improper persons, is a curse to our government, and it is the affair of every honest voter, wherever born, to see that no fraudulent voting is allowed, that no fraud in connection with naturalization is permitted.

Revision of Naturalization Laws.

There should be a comprehensive revision of the naturalization laws. The courts having power to naturalize should be definitely named by national authority, the testimony upon which naturalization may be conferred should be definitely prescribed, publication of impending naturalization applications should be required in advance of their hearing in court, the form and wording of all certificates issued should be uniform throughout the country, and the courts should be required to make returns to the secretary of state at stated periods of all naturalizations conferred.

Not only are the laws relating to naturalization now defective, but those relating to citizenship of the United States ought also to be made the subject of scientific inquiry with a view to probable further legislation. The power of the government to protect the integrity of the elections of its own officials is inherent and has been recognized and affirmed by repeated declarations of the supreme court. There is no enemy of free government more dangerous and none so insidious as the corruption of the electorate. I recommend the enactment of a law directed against bribery and corruption in federal elections.

Delays in Criminal Prosecutions.

No subject is better worthy the attention of the congress than that portion of the report of the attorney general dealing with the long delays and the great obstruction to justice experienced in the cases of Beavers, Green and Gaynor and Benson. Were these isolated and special cases I should not call your attention to them, but the difficulties encountered as regards these men who have been indicted for criminal practices are not exceptional. They are precisely similar in kind to what occurs again and again in the case of criminals who have sufficient means to enable them to take advantage of a system of procedure which has grown up in the federal courts and which amounts in effect to making the law easy of enforcement against the man who has no money and difficult of enforcement, even to the point of sometimes securing immunity, as regards the man who has money. At present the interests of the innocent man are amply safeguarded, but the interests of the government—that is, the interests of honest administration; that is, the interests of the people—are not recognized as they should be.

[The president discusses the progress of the territories of Alaska, Hawaii [illegible] for changes in the present system of government of the first named. He desires to see a delegate from Alaska in congress.]

Foreign Policy.

The steady aim of this nation, as of all enlightened nations, should be to strive to bring ever nearer the day when there shall prevail throughout the world the peace of justice, but there are kinds of peace which are highly undesirable, which are in the long run as destructive as any war. The goal to set before us as a nation, the goal which should be set before all mankind, is the attainment of the peace of justice, of the peace which comes when each nation is not merely safeguarded in its own rights, but scrupulously recognizes and performs its duty toward others. Generally peace tells for righteousness, but if there is conflict between the two then our fealty is due first to the cause of righteousness. Unrighteous wars are common and unrighteous peace is rare, but both should be shunned. The right of freedom and the responsibility for the exercise of that right cannot be divorced. One of our great poets has well and finely said that freedom is not a gift that tarries long in the hands of cowards. Neither does it tarry long in the hands of those too slothful, too dishonest or too unintelligent to exercise it. The eternal vigilance which is the price of liberty must be exercised sometimes to guard against outside foes, although, of course, far more often to guard against our own selfish or thoughtless shortcomings.

It is our duty to remember that a nation has no more right to do injustice to another nation, strong or weak, than an individual has to do injustice to another individual; that the same moral law applies in one case as in the other. But we must also remember that it is as much the duty of the nation to guard its own rights and its own interests as it is the duty of the individual so to do. Until some method is devised by which there shall be a degree of international control over offending nations it would be a wicked thing for the most civilized powers, for those with most sense of international obligations and with keenest and most generous appreciation of the difference between right and wrong, to disarm. If the great civilized nations of the present day should completely disarm, the result would mean an immediate recrudescence of barbarism in one form or another. Under any circumstances a sufficient armament would have to be kept up to serve the purposes of international police, and until international cohesion and the sense of international duties and rights are far more advanced than at present a nation desirous both of securing respect for itself and of doing good to others must have a force adequate for the work which it feels is allotted to it as its part of the general world duty. Therefore it follows that a self respecting, just and farseeing nation should on the one hand endeavor by every means to aid in the development of the various movements which tend to provide substitutes for war, which tend to render nations in their actions toward one another and indeed toward their own peoples more responsive to the general sentiment of humane and civilized mankind, and, on the other hand, that it should keep prepared, while scrupulously avoiding wrongdoing itself, to repel any wrong and in exceptional cases to take action which in a more advanced stage of international relations would come under the head of the exercise of the international police.

Arbitration Treaties.

We are in every way endeavoring to help on, with cordial good will, every movement which will tend to bring us into more friendly relations with the rest of mankind. In pursuance of this policy I shall shortly lay before the senate treaties of arbitration with all powers which are willing to enter into these treaties with us. It is not possible at this period of the world's development to agree to arbitrate all matters, but there are many matters of possible difference between us and other nations which can be thus arbitrated. Furthermore, at the request of the interparliamentary union, an eminent body composed of practical statesmen from all countries, I have asked the powers to join with this government in a second Hague conference, at which it is hoped that the work already so happily begun at The Hague may be carried some steps further toward completion. This carries out the desire expressed by the first Hague conference itself.

Policy Toward Other Nations of Western Hemisphere.

It is not true that the United States feels any land hunger or entertains any projects as regards the other nations of the western hemisphere save such as are for their welfare. All that this country desires is to see the neighboring countries stable, orderly and prosperous. Any country whose people conduct themselves well can count upon our hearty friendship. If a nation shows that it knows how to act with reasonable efficiency and decency in social and political matters, if it keeps order and pays its obligations, it need fear no interference from the United States. Chronic wrongdoing or an impotence which results in a general loosening of the ties of civilized society may in America, as elsewhere, ultimately require intervention by some civilized nation, and in the western hemisphere the adherence of the United States to the Monroe doctrine may force the United States, however reluctantly, in flagrant cases of such wrongdoing or impotence, to the exercise of an international police power.

Rights of American Citizens Abroad.

It is necessary for us firmly to insist upon the rights of our own citizens abroad without regard to their creed or race; without regard to whether they were [illegible] been born or been [illegible] our Jewish fellow citizens to receive passports and travel through Russian territory. It is a wrong against which we are entitled to protest to refuse him his passport without regard to his conduct and character, merely on racial and religious grounds.

The Navy.

The strong arm of the government in enforcing respect for its just rights in international matters is the navy of the United States. I most earnestly recommend that there be no halt in the work of upbuilding the American navy. We have undertaken to build the isthmian canal. We have undertaken to secure for ourselves our just share in the trade of the orient. We have undertaken to protect our citizens from improper treatment in foreign lands. We continue steadily to insist on the application of the Monroe doctrine to the western hemisphere. Unless our attitude in these and all similar matters is to be a mere boastful sham we cannot afford to abandon our naval programme. Our voice is now potent for peace and is so potent because we are not afraid of war. But our protestations upon behalf of peace would neither receive nor deserve the slightest attention if we were impotent to make them good.

The Army.

Within the last three years the United States has set an example in disarmament where disarmament was proper. By law our army is fixed at a maximum of 100,000 and a minimum of 60,000 men. When there was insurrection in the Philippines we kept the army at the maximum. Peace came in the Philippines, and now our army has been reduced to the minimum at which it is possible to keep it with due regard to its efficiency. We should be able, in the event of some sudden emergency, to put into the field one first class army corps, which should be, as a whole, at least the equal of any body of troops of like number belonging to any other nation.

Great progress has been made in protecting our coasts by adequate fortifications with sufficient guns. We should, however, pay much more heed than at present to the development of an extensive system of floating mines for use in all our more important harbors. These mines have been proved to be a most formidable safeguard against hostile fleets.

The Philippines.

In the Philippine Islands there has been during the past year a continuation of the steady progress which has obtained ever since our troops definitely got the upper hand of the insurgents. The Philippine people, or, to speak more accurately, the many tribes and even races sundered from one another more or less sharply who go to make up the people of the Philippine Islands, contain many elements of good, and some elements which we have a right to hope stand for progress. At present they are utterly incapable of existing in independence at all or of building up a civilization of their own. I firmly believe that we can help them to rise higher and higher in the scale of civilization and of capacity for self government, and I most earnestly hope that in the end they will be able to stand, if not entirely alone, yet in some such relation to the United States as Cuba now stands. This end is not yet in sight, and it may be indefinitely postponed if our people are foolish enough to turn the attention of the Filipinos away from the problems of achieving moral and material prosperity, of working for a stable, orderly and just government, and toward foolish and dangerous intrigues for a complete independence for which they are as yet totally unfit.

On the other hand, our people must keep steadily before their minds the fact that the justification for our stay in the Philippines must ultimately rest chiefly upon the good we are able to do in the islands. I do not overlook the fact that in the development of our interests in the Pacific ocean and along its coasts the Philippines have played and will play an important part, and that our interests have been served in more than one way by the possession of the islands. But our chief reason for continuing to hold them must be that we ought in good faith to try to do our share of the world's work, and this particular piece of work has been imposed upon us by the results of the war with Spain. We are endeavoring to develop the natives themselves so that they shall take an ever increasing share in their own government, and, as far as is prudent, we are already admitting their representatives to a governmental equality with our own. There are commissioners, judges and governors in the islands who are Filipinos and who have exactly the same share in the government of the islands as have their colleagues who are Americans, while in the lower ranks, of course, the great majority of the public servants are Filipinos. Within two years we shall be trying the experiment of an elective lower house in the Philippine legislature. If the Filipinos act with wisdom and self restraint, if they show that they are capable of electing a legislature which in its turn is capable of taking a sane and efficient part in the actual work of government, they can rest assured that a full and increasing measure of recognition will be given them.

Every measure taken concerning the islands should be taken primarily with a view to their advantage. We should certainly give them lower tariff rates on their exports to the United States. If this is not done it will be a wrong to extend our shipping laws to them. I earnestly hope for the immediate enactment into law of the legislation now pending to encourage American capital to seek investment in the islands in railroads, in factories, in plantations and in lumbering and mining.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

A Wonderful Memory.

Some years ago there was a strolling player at Edinburgh of the name of William Lyon, who had a most astonishing memory. He one evening made a bet of a bowl of punch that he would at the rehearsal next morning repeat the whole of the Daily Advertiser from beginning to end. Being called on the next day, he handed the newspaper to a gentleman present to see that he repeated every word correctly. This task he accomplished without making the slightest error, through all the varieties of advertisements, price of stocks, accidents, etc.

Be Quick.

Not a minute should be lost when a child shows symptoms of croup. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough appears, will prevent the attack. It never fails and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

Love or Sport?

The young schoolgirl or student may possibly seem overeager about hockey, but we all know perfectly well that not so long ago young men and love affairs were the prevailing subjects of the young girl's thoughts. No one surely will say that it is not an improvement to have healthy play instead of sickly sentiment.—London Church Times.

Sufferers from sciatica should not hesitate to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The prompt relief from pain which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

A Nerve Trying Ordeal.

Some years ago the students at the Japanese Naval academy were accustomed to attend an annual banquet. They sat at a circular table around a slowly revolving cannon loaded with a ball and trained to the level of their heads. The trigger was so arranged that it could be touched from a hidden source outside of the banquet hall. That at some time during the banquet the cannon would be fired every one at the table knew, but just when or in what direction it would be pointing was a mystery.

Of course there was a possibility that the ball might crash harmlessly between the heads of two banqueters, but it was equally probably that it might carry off the head of some student. Yet no one flinched. The chances were equal to all.

The picturesque object of destruction revolving during the jovial hours of the banquet, pointing from student to student and ready at a given moment to blow any one of them to pieces, was considered in Japan admirable training to steady the nerves of a fighting man.—Success.

Ancestor Worship In China.

Every Chinaman is supposed to possess three souls. One goes into the ground at burial, one into the "ancestral tablet" and one into the realm of spirits. It is partly in order to provide the last with those things which are requisite to its well being that ancestor worship is kept up, departed ancestors often taking revenge on the living for any negligence on their part in the performance of the customary rites for the dead by bringing some calamity upon the household. These "rites of the dead" are performed for all over ten years of age, with the hope of delivering them from hades or of improving their condition there. They last for periods that vary according to the age and wealth of the deceased—for children and young people from seven days to a month, for a middle aged man of ordinary means from a month to forty-nine days.

RECTOR OF ST. LUKE'S,

Ashburnham, Ontario, Testifies to the Good Qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Ashburnham, Ont., April 18, 1903.—I think that it is only right that I should tell you what a wonderful effect Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has produced. The day before Easter I was so distressed with a cold and cough that I did not think to be able to take any duties the next day, as my voice was almost choked by the cough. The same day I received an order from you for a bottle of your Cough Remedy. I at once procured a sample bottle, and took about three doses of the medicine. To my great relief the cough and cold had completely disappeared and I was able to preach three times on Easter day. I know that this rapid and effective cure was due to Cough Remedy. I make this testimony without solicitation, being thankful to have found such a God-sent remedy, Respectfully yours,

E. A. LANGFELDT, M. A.

Incongruities.

A prominent New York clergyman was arguing with a youth of his parish about the evils of young men smoking cigarettes.

"What would you think," said he, "if you met an angel coming along with a cigarette in his mouth?"

"Well, doctor, what would you think if you saw an angel with an umbrella and a pair of patent leathers?"

RAISING OUR MORAL TONE.

Will Not Be Done In Politics Until Our Women Vote.

The state constitutions of Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho and Utah make no discrimination against sex. Women are citizens and vote on equal terms with men. All other state constitutions make invidious distinctions. The majority classify women, idiots, criminals and untaxed Indians in the category of the disfranchised. This official brand of inferiority reflects on the moral tone of the nation. Politics, the religion of our national life, is a synonym for corruption and vice. The morality and purity which women could infuse into public affairs are denied on the most illogical of pretexts, while the naturalized foreign felon is admitted to participate in citizenship.

So lightly do we hold the claims of men from the standpoint of fitness to govern that in fourteen states a foreigner, knowing nothing of our institutions or principles, can vote "on intention of being naturalized," even though he has just landed on our shores. The American born woman, with a line of American ancestors, is superseded by these alien hordes.

That one half of the people of the nation should be dominated by the other half upon no better credentials than those of sex is an injustice that mocks our republican motto of "equal rights for all." IDA PORTER BOYER.

The Baboon's Nine Lives.

When baboons once take to a mealie field they will not leave it till they have eaten every cob. When they depart every evening for home they have filled their stomachs, their cheek pouches and their arms! You cannot poison these pests, for fifteen grains of pure strychnine in a banana has failed to kill one. Only shooting with a rifle will do, and no human army was ever cleverer in setting sentries. Even at nighttime a large force of hunters has often been defied in its attempts to surround the rocky stronghold of Cynocephalus porcarius. Even dogs sent against the baboons fail before creatures which have hands with which to seize their enemies before biting them. Let the stay at home farmer congratulate himself on possessing merely rooks, pigeons, rats and sparrows!—Country Gentleman.

WEEDS

Consumption is a human weed flourishing best in weak lungs. Like other weeds it's easily destroyed while young; when old, sometimes impossible.

Strengthen the lungs as you would weak land and the weeds will disappear.

The best lung fertilizer is Scott's Emulsion. Salt pork is good too, but it is very hard to digest.

The time to treat consumption is when you begin trying to hide it from yourself. Others see it, you won't.

Don't wait until you can't deceive yourself any longer. Begin with the first thought to take Scott's Emulsion. If it isn't really consumption so much the better; you will soon forget it and be better for the treatment. If it is consumption you can't expect to be cured at once, but if you will begin in time and will be rigidly regular in your treatment you will win.

Scott's Emulsion, fresh air, rest all you can, eat all you can, that's the treatment and that's the best treatment.

We will send you a little of the Emulsion free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

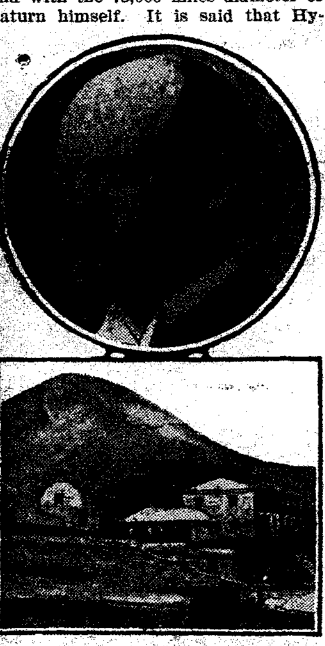
THE ELUSIVE PHOEBE

PROFESSOR W. H. PICKERING'S PURSUIT OF THE ERRATIC SATELLITE.

After Locating Her Once by Photography and the Telescope He Lost Her For a Time—His Work in South America.

An astronomical article published but a short time ago made this statement: "Saturn has at least eight satellites. A ninth was discovered photographically in 1890 at the Arequipa (Peru) station of the Harvard university observatory, but this discovery still lacks confirmation." However, Professor William H. Pickering, who originally made the find, has now proved beyond cavil the existence of the ninth satellite. Saturn, the ancient divinity of the Greeks and Romans, had numerous relatives, and as fast as astronomers have discovered new satellites of the planet Saturn they have named them for brothers or sisters or other kinsfolk of the mythical god of the ancients. The ninth satellite was named Phoebe by Professor Pickering in honor of one of Saturn's sisters. The eight other members of the family are Japetus, Hyperion, Tethys, Dione, Titan, Engalade, Mimas and Rhea.

The newly discovered Phoebe has some traits which distinguish her as just about the most erratic attache of a planet that ever came under an astronomer's telescope. Professor Pickering, who has recently mapped out the moon and published an atlas by which one can study the geography of the satellite of Mother Earth, has learned that Phoebe plays a game of "peekaboo" with inquisitive observers from this planet. Not only so, but contrary to the regulations of Saturn's numerous family she revolves backward. To begin with, Phoebe is a very small sphere, her diameter being only about 200 miles, as calculated by Professor Pickering. That is minute in comparison with the earth's 8,000 miles and with the 73,000 miles diameter of Saturn himself. It is said that Hyperion, could that satellite be seen from Saturn, would look about as large as Jupiter does to observers on the earth. But Phoebe would look only about the size of a star of the fifth or sixth magnitude. No resident of earth has seen Miss Phoebe with the naked eye or even directly through the telescope. Professor Pickering has never seen her except as a speck on a photographic plate, and even then it required several photographs, locating her at different attitudes of her eccentric orbit, to prove that what was seen was not simply a speck of dust in the telescope.



PROFESSOR WILLIAM H. PICKERING AND HARVARD'S PERUVIAN OBSERVATORY.

Phoebe was discovered by Professor Pickering through the twenty-four inch Bruce telescope of the Harvard observatory at Arequipa, Peru, March 14, 1899. The professor had been looking for her for eleven years. Several photographs were taken and observations made as to her characteristics when suddenly she disappeared, and disappeared so completely as to make the astronomer wonder whether he had ever discovered her at all. But at length she was located again, and it was then found that her habit of going backward accounted for her success in fooling the curious star gazers. Various explanations are offered for this retrograde motion. One is that Phoebe was originally a comet which was captured by Saturn. In such case the comet by passing on one side of Saturn would have given direct motion to the resulting satellite or on the other retrograde.

Professor Pickering is an expert in the business of photographing the heavenly bodies. He can tell when it snows in Mars, and, as for the moon, he has that mapped out as accurately as a tract cut up into town lots. His "Atlas of the Moon" tells everything about the orb of night from its origin, some hundreds of millions of years ago, to its present day vegetation and snow. Professor Pickering is forty-six years old. He is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. When he was twenty he assisted in the observations made in Colorado of the total eclipse of 1878. He became connected with the Harvard observatory in 1887. In connection with his astronomical work Professor Pickering has climbed some tall mountains. He has ascended over 100 peaks, including El Misti, in Peru, which soars to an altitude of 19,400 feet. The Arequipa station is located over 8,000 feet above sea level, and it has been found that magnifying powers can be used there two or three times as high as in New England.

THE SELFISH COUPLE.

Husbands and Wives Who Refuse to Mingle In Society.

Selfishness is the bane of all life. It cannot enter into life—individual, family or social—without cursing it. Therefore if any married pair find themselves inclined to confine themselves to one another's society, indisposed to go abroad and mingle with the life around them, disturbed and irritated by the collection of friends in their own dwelling or in any way moved to regard their social duties as disagreeable, let them be alarmed at once.

It is a bad symptom—an essentially morbid symptom. They should institute means at once for removing this feeling, and they can only remove it by persistently going into society, persistently gathering it into their own dwelling and persistently endeavoring to learn to love and feel an interest in all with whom they meet. The process of regeneration will not be a tedious one, for the rewards of social life are immediate.

The heart enlarges quickly with the practice of hospitality. The sympathies run and take root from point to point, each root throwing up leaves and bearing flowers and fruit like strawberry vines if they are only allowed to do so.

It is only sympathies and strawberries that are cultivated in hills which do otherwise. The human face is a thing which should be able to bring the heart into blossom with a moment's shining, and will be such with you if you will meet it properly.

The penalties of family isolation will not, unhappily, fall entirely upon yourselves. They will be visited with double force upon your children. Children reared in the home with few or no associations will grow up either boorish or sensitively timid.

It is a cruel wrong to children to rear them without bringing them into continued contact with polite social life. The ordeal through which children thus reared are obliged to pass in gaining the ease and assurance which will make them at home elsewhere than under the paternal roof is one of the severest, while those who are constantly accustomed to a social life from their youth are educated in all its forms and graces without knowing it.

Great multitudes of men and women all over the country are now living secluded from social contact simply from their sensitive consciousness of ignorance of the forms of graceful intercourse.

They feel that they cannot break through their reserve. There is, doubtless, much that is morbid in this feeling, and yet it is mainly natural. From all this mortification and this deprivation every soul might have been saved by education in a home where social life was properly lived. It is cruel to deny to children the opportunity not only to become accustomed from their first consciousness to the forms of society, but to enjoy its influence upon their developing life.

Society is food to children. Contact with other minds is the means by which they are educated, and the difference in families of children will show at once to the accustomed eye the different social character of their parents. But I have no space to follow this subject further, and I leave it with you, with the earnest wish that you will consider it and profit by the suggestions I have given you.—"Timothy Titcomb's Letters" in Boston Globe.

Politeness Pays.

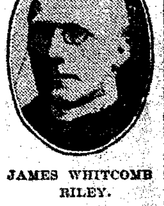
Virtue is not to be measured by ostentatious giving. There is frequently more real love for humanity in the soul of the man who removes the banana skin from the pavement than in the heart of the donor of the memorial window in the church. Politeness, like all other faults and virtues, may become habitual. It is surprising how many small acts of kindness, how many little deeds of helpfulness, one may do in the course of a day when there are inclination to be kind and a lookout kept for the opportunity. One may set out with this intention in the morning, and the footing up at night—not to others, but to one's own secret conscience—will be cheering and encouraging.

Whales on Their Holidays.

Professor Goldiob has been telling the Christiania Academy of Science the results of his investigations into the migrations of whales. These creatures hang about the coast of Norway and Finland until the spring is well advanced, and then they go away on their travels. Some go to the Azores, others to Bermuda and the Antilles, and they cover these enormous distances in an incredibly short time. Some of them bring back harpoons which bear the names of ships and other evidences of where these migrants have been for their summer holidays.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, the Hoosier poet, is a bachelor and is very fond of children. He easily makes friends with them and has a large fund of humorous anecdotes concerning them. "A certain young mother," he said recently, "was striving to bring up her small son in a proper Christian manner. His day ended with the usual short prayer at his mother's knee before going to bed.



JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

"One night she was called away and returned to find him snuggled under the warm blankets.

"'Did you say your prayers, dear?' she inquired.

"'Nope,' was the answer.

"'Are you not going to say them?'

"'I didn't say 'em last night nor tonight,' said the small heathen cheerfully, 'an' then, if nothin' happens tomorrow night, I won't say 'em any more at all.'"

Count Benckendorff, the Russian ambassador to Great Britain, was placed in a very difficult and perplexing position by the North sea episode, which recently so wrought up public feeling in England. He had to make pledges on Russia's behalf to allay the indignation of the English, and in some cases the home government failed to back him up in respect to these promises. It is stated that Count Benckendorff promised that part of the Baltic fleet would be detained at Vigo until the firing on the British fishermen could be investigated. It was not so detained, however, and the count's action was disavowed by the government at St. Petersburg. It is said he would have been recalled had it not been for Lord Lansdowne's action in accepting the disavowal for the sake of keeping him at his post. The ambassador did everything possible to avert the precipitation of hostilities between England and Russia over the act of the Baltic fleet, and his friendship with British statesmen and known attitude as an advocate of close relations between England and Russia helped to keep the peace despite the fact that some mistaken British subjects under impulse of the moment tried to mob him.

COUNT BENCKENDORFF.

Count Benckendorff is an old friend of Queen Alexandra and also stands in the good graces of King Edward owing to the fact that his sister was a devoted friend of the king's sister, the late Empress Frederick of Germany. The count was born in 1849 and after a course of study in Germany and France entered upon his diplomatic career in 1869 as an honorary attache to the embassy at Rome. He married the Countess Sophie Schouvaloff. He was Russian minister at Copenhagen previous to his appointment as ambassador at the court of St. James.

Dr. Francis L. Patton, formerly president of Princeton university and now president of Princeton Theological seminary, enjoys the unique distinction of being by right of birth both a citizen of the United States and a subject of Great Britain. It comes about in this way: His grandfather, a native born American and a New Yorker, was engaged in the coastwise trade and went to live in Bermuda. He retained his American citizenship, though he lived in Bermuda the rest of his life. The father of Dr. Patton was born in New York, but he married in Bermuda and was living there when the future president of Princeton university was born. Of course, the fact of his father's citizenship made Dr. Patton an American citizen, according to American law, even though he was born on British soil. But according to English law any one born on British land is a subject of Great Britain, and it is held that Dr. Patton has the right to regard himself as a subject of King Edward. He prefers to consider himself an American citizen, but has refrained from declaring his citizenship in order to preserve his rights to an ancestral estate in Bermuda and pass these rights on to his children. It is said the estate might pass to the crown were he to declare his American citizenship. Dr. Patton is well known as a theologian of the conservative type. The New York Herald relates that while traveling recently by rail he called the porter to bring him a table of some sort. As the colored official disappeared the reverend doctor took from his valise a bundle of papers preparatory to sorting them. The porter returned at once, eyed the doctor knowingly and finally sought the end of the car. When he came back, so the story goes, he carried with him a bottle, a glass and a decanter.

DR. PATTON.

"What's this?" said the reverend gentleman.

The porter grinned from ear to ear and winked.

"I told you to bring me a table or something," said the clergyman.

"Yes, sir. Exactly, sir. You said 'or something.' I knew what you wanted all right, sir. We call it by lots of different names."

"These people who get one idea or one tenet and never change," said Representative John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, the Democratic leader of the house, "always bring to my mind an episode at a dinner I attended once where a scholarly and eloquent pioneer was telling of the dangers that beset him in his early days in the west.

"'I remember once,' he said, 'when I was traveling from one town to another, a tremendous thunderstorm came up. The scene was frightful, awe inspiring. I expected every moment that the lightning would strike the tree under which I had sought shelter.'

"'Why in thunder didn't you get under another tree?' shouted a man at one of the tables, and the speech ended right there."

The success of Professor P. G. Holden of the Iowa Agricultural college in making more corn grow in Iowa is the subject of eager interest in agricultural communities. Professor Holden is an agronomist. This term signifies being expert in agricultural science. He found that by making careful selections from the corn crops for seed and by planting that seed the next year in accordance with well known principles of agricultural science he could, with proper methods of cultivation, bring about a large increase in crops. One experiment led to another, and the success he met with resulted in his being engaged as a professor of the Iowa Agricultural college. In consequence largely of heeding his advice the farmers of Iowa raised in 1904 about 125,000,000 more bushels of corn than they did the year previous. The increase in the value of the state crop is put at $30,000,000. In a voting contest among the farmers for the most popular man in the state it is thought Professor Holden would win by a tremendous majority.

PROFESSOR HOLDEN.

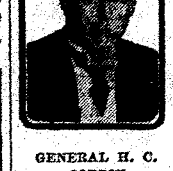
John Sharp Williams is one of the wittiest men in congress and usually more than holds his own at repartee, but the following anecdote indicates that the famous Mississippian now and then catches a Tartar. One day when he was speaking in Mississippi a man in the audience cried, "I've been robbed by pickpockets!"

"I did not suspect there were any Republicans present," said Mr. Williams, amid great laughter.

"There ain't," cried the victim; "I'm the only one!"

Regular army officers say that volunteers are a trifle deficient in matters of military etiquette. A story is told of a volunteer captain who started in by calling General Miles plain "Miles," whereat the general sardonically remarked: "Don't call me 'Miles;' it's too formal. Call me 'Nelse.'"

Major General Henry Clark Corbin, who is now in the Philippines, tells an amusing story of a young lieutenant of militia who accompanied his fellow volunteers to the war game at Manassas recently.



GENERAL H. C. CORBIN.

It appears, says Collier's Weekly, that the young volunteer officer in question was conversing with certain regular army officers near General Corbin's tent when General Grant and his staff passed. The regular officers arose and saluted, but the volunteer lieutenant sat still.

"That was General Grant," said one of the regulars to the lieutenant. "Why didn't you salute him?"

"Oh," responded the volunteer nonchalantly, "I've only been here a few days, and we haven't been introduced."

Now that Fred C. Whitney is again reveling so conspicuously in comic opera an old saying of his has been revived.

A number of years ago, long before Mr. Whitney became the highly successful comic opera manager that he is today, he produced a comic opera in New York that was a failure from the start and was withdrawn after a few performances. However, that did not daunt Mr. Whitney in the least.

"I'm not going to quit," said he. "Don't you believe it. I'm going to put on another comic opera right away. I'm not discouraged, for I know there is money in comic opera. I know it's there because I have put it in."

Frederick M. Warner, governor elect of Michigan, is the present secretary of state of the commonwealth. He is forty years old, is of British parentage and was brought up on a farm near Birmingham, Mich. He received a common school education and as a young man engaged in the cheese business. He now owns several cheese factories and is also interested in brickmaking. His home is at Farmington. He has served two terms as a member of the Michigan state senate and is now serving his second term as secretary of state.

GOVERNOR ELECT F. M. WARNER.

Low Taste.

"I thought you were quite well acquainted with Brown," said Ascum.

"No, indeed," replied Cholly. "I—aw—only associate with my equals, and"—

"Really, you should aim higher than that."—Philadelphia Press.

BITS FROM THE WRITERS.

A brave man doesn't think; he acts.—H. Rider Haggard.

Hurry, excitement, bustle—these are not good for people. Let us go slow and live long.—Frank T. Bullen.

There is only one way in which a man or woman can develop real strength, and that is to fight unceasingly and to stand absolutely alone.—Gertrude Atherton.

To borrow one's mental fare from free libraries is like picking up eatables dropped by some one else on the road and making one's dinner off another's leavings.—Marie Corelli.

To go a-fishing in the pond of the past is a pastime not devoid of charm. What old, forgotten, faroff things can be dragged up by the assiduous angler!—Ella Hepworth Dixon.

By leading people to suppose that you are as wise as themselves you lose opportunities of obtaining useful information. They won't tell you things they think you know already.—Sarah Grand.

Trace Your Family Tree.

A pleasant pastime—literally—for those who have no more pressing duties and wish to get outside their environment at least in thought will open up before her who begins to mount a family tree. Tracing one's genealogy may become—probably will become—a matter of absorbing amusement and attention, for it entails a thread gathered up here, dropped there, a letter to write, a book to read, a register to consult. To the self absorbed, the despondent, the listless, one may recommend this diversion as certain to suit even rather morbid conditions of temperament and yet as certain to gently force the mind away from itself to other persons and things in opening up a wider and wider field of reflection.

Kimberley Siege Babies.

During Lord Roberts' tour in South Africa he chanced to be in Kimberley on his seventy-second birthday, and the people of that city presented him with a pair of diamonds. One of the "siege babies," a boy of four years, made the presentation speech. During the siege of Kimberley by the Boers about fifty babies were born. Lord Roberts had his photograph taken in the midst of the "siege babies" on the steps of the town hall. Most of the "siege babies" bear names recalling the war. Thus, while "French," "Buller," "Methuen," "Bobs" and "Kekewich" were used, "Rhodes" was even more frequently used, and "Siege" seems to have been most popular of all.

Mental Decision.

The trouble with the most of us is that we do not know how to make up our minds, and often the fact is that we have not given our minds to the thought that requires us to determine about it. Why is it the sun shines and sheds its warmth through one glass, but accomplishes nothing? Change the form of the glass through which it comes, let us make it convex, and first you will see the smoke, then the spark and then the flame.—Rev. T. V. McLeod.

COLOR IN FIREWORKS

HOW THE BEAUTIFUL AND DAZZLING HUES ARE PRODUCED.

It Is All a Matter of Chemistry, the Result of the Combustion of the Salts of Certain Metals—The Mechanics of Rotating Fireworks.

The chief beauty of fireworks is their range of resplendent colors—ruby, sapphire, emerald, topaz, amethyst, aquamarine and scores of tints and shades between. How is all this evanescent glory of color obtained? The secret lies in directed chemical combustion by means of cases and compositions, the results of marvelous calculation and skill.

The matter is simple enough to those who know. It is attained by the combustion of the salts of certain metals. In other words, the burning metals have each their characteristic color. Sodium gives off yellow flame; calcium, orange; barium, green; strontium, red; copper, green or blue, according to circumstances, and so on. Other familiar metals, iron, steel and zinc, give their tribute of colors. Iron filings give bright red and white sparks; copper filings, a green tint; zinc, a fine blue; steel filings and cast iron borings, a brilliant fire with wavy radiations.

Every one is familiar with the colored fires, but who would suppose that lycopodium, the delicate pollen of certain mosses, so fine that it is used to powder baby's skin, furnishes a rose colored fire with a magnificent flame? These colored fires are called in technical language "fixed fires" and consist of slow compositions that may be piled in little cones on a flagstone and lighted at the top. They burn slowly and there is no explosion. These compositions are made in many colors.

Roman candles belong to the fixed fire class and are also called fusees. We all know the straight, slender cylinder or cartridge of the ordinary roman candle. It is packed as follows: First there is put in it a charge of fine gunpowder, and above this is placed a "star." These are simply balls of some special composition containing metallic filings, according to the color desired, made up with [illegible] spirits of wine. Stars and charges alternate until the cylinder is full. [illegible] and dusted with [illegible] packing. The first charge of [illegible] der in exploding starts the [illegible] cession until one after another they blaze individually and vanish like falling stars. Next in order to the fixed fires come rotating fireworks—namely, wheels, fire wheels, bisecting wheels, plural wheels, caprice wheels and spiral wheels, all more or less complex.

The colors of fireworks are a matter of chemistry; the no less important motions that display the beauty of these colors to the best advantage are a matter of mechanics. The man who is a first class pyrotechnist is versed in both sciences.

The ordinary pinwheel is a simple example of rotating fireworks. It is a long case packed with a fire composition and wound round a disk of wood. The outer end of the spiral is primed with an explosive material. When it is lighted it "kicks," just as a gun does when the powder explodes in the cartridge, and round and round flies the wheel, sending out flashes and showers of colored or golden fire.

Some of the most dazzling and glorious effects in pyrotechnical displays are produced by rotating fireworks, for there seems to be no limit to the variety of arrangement of cases and compositions to produce multiple motions and transformation scenes in color in this class of fireworks.

A third class comprises the ascending fireworks. Skyrockets belong to this class and may be simple or very elaborate, according to their garniture of stars, sparks, spirals, serpents or showers of gold or silver rain.

A skyrocket consists of two parts—a body and a head made separately and afterward attached to the body. The body is a straight cylinder of heavy pasted paper closed at the lower end so as to leave only a very narrow opening for the escape of the fire. A central hollow bore extends three-quarters of the way up the body, and all about this is packed the special explosive composition, the downward recoil of which sends the rocket rushing swiftly upward, guided and balanced by the light stick of willow wood. The head, a paper cylinder with a conical top, holds the special composition which is to form stars, serpents, spirals or what not. A fuse in the top of the body explodes when the rocket reaches its utmost height and sets off this composition, the varying color, form and motion of which excite the "Ohs!" and "Ahs!" of the admiring crowds.

The great spectacular displays combine the several classes—fixed, rotating and ascending fireworks.

Temples, trees, ships, portraits, figures of men, beasts and birds, flowers, shields, and so forth, are represented by suitable frameworks of wood either wound with coarse cotton rovings about two inches in diameter, impregnated with certain compositions and wet with spirits, or else they have attached to them lances or cases of cartridge paper filled with various compositions, the whole placed in communication by conduits or small paper cartridges.—Youth's Companion.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 14, 1904.

Acceptances for the Peace Conference at the Hague come tumbling into Washington so fast from the nations of the earth that it begins to look as if a panic had overtaken the old world regarding the possibility of future wars. Perhaps this country's preparedness for martial conflicts has something to do with it.

The most remarkable Thanksgiving dinner given in this country was in St. Louis, when the children of twenty-two nationalities were feasted. At the tables were Negrotos, Hindoos, Singalese, Esquimos, Indians, Ainus, Yankees and Chinese. No color line was drawn and geographical distinctions were ignored. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier of Canada, and his wife, were interested spectators.

At last the pension roll of the United States exceeds one million of persons, the number now being 1,000,781. It is thought that the maximum has been reached. There has been a corresponding increase in the payments, but it is given out that the expenses of running the bureau are to be curtailed, and that in the near future some five hundred clerks may be dispensed with. Many of them are receiving larger salaries than they could earn if left to their own resources, and reductions are proposed. This has already taken place in the fees of examining surgeons. As Speaker Cannon says, one way to make both ends meet is to practice economy. Other people have to do this, and Government employes are not exempt from the common lot of humanity.

THE rapid increase of the free mail delivery under Republican auspices ought to give good paying employment to thousands of men, if there are so many in need of work. By the first of July, 1905, it is estimated that this service will embrace 33,000 different routes, [illegible] expected that for the fiscal [illegible] more routes, will be added. Altogether this will cost about $26,000,000 annually. It is doubtful if any other industry in the country grows more rapidly, or pays better wages. Now if an efficient parcels posts could be added, the benefits to rural and commercial communities would be beyond computation. This will come just as soon as the people demand it, and can be had for the same price.

LYSANDER.

Last Friday morning about 2 o'clock fire was discovered in the building which was formerly the old Presbyterian church, but was occupied by A. Hunt as a barber shop, pool-room and dance hall. The building and contents were totally destroyed. The building was not insured, but there was some insurance on the contents.

Beware of Counterfeits.

"DeWitt's is the only Witch Hazel Salve" writes J. L. Tucker of Centre, Ala. "I have used it in my family for piles, cuts, and burns for years and can recommend it to be the best salve on the market. Every family should keep it, as it is an invaluable household remedy, and should always be kept on hand for immediate use" Mrs. Samuel Gage of North Bush, N. Y. says. "I had a fever sore on my ankle for twelve years that the doctors could not cure. All salve's and blood remedies proved worthless. I could not walk for over two years. Finally I was persuaded to try DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, which has completely cured me. It is a wonderful relief." DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures without leaving a scar. Sold by H. C. QUEER SUPERSTITIONS.

Some Medicines, Cures and Omens of Former Generations.

A sure cure for the ague, according to an old time specific, was to rub a live spider in butter and then eat it. The late Vincent Stuckey Lane, who died in England after spending much of his life in the collection of folk lore, gives many other instances of the medicines of former generations. To rub a dried mole to powder and to swallow as much of it as would lie on a shilling for nine days in succession was another cure for ague. A hare's foot carried on the person prevented colic, eels applied to the ears were a specific against deafness, and epilepsy yielded to a gentle treatment of toadstools gathered just as they were forcing their way through the ground and swallowed in claret at midnight. There were many ways of curing fits, but the simplest plan was to go into a church at midnight and walk three times round the communion table. A snake's skin worn round the temples was good for the headache, but if that failed the sufferer might try moss grown on a human skull, then powdered and taken as snuff.

Whooping cough could never be caught by a child who had ridden a bear, but if no bear was handy the child might be soundly thrashed or drawn backward through a bramble bush. The subject of signs and omens fills a number of pages of Mr. Lane's five volumes. Under the heading "Good and Ill Luck In Marriage" he shows on how trifling a matter the marital happiness or unhappiness of our ancestors could turn. It was unlucky, for example, to receive a present of doves, to marry on the anniversary of birth, to tread on the tail of a cat, to put on one's stockings wrong side out or to try the wedding ring on before marriage.

On the wedding day the happy couple had to redouble their vigilance, as a horse looking at them through a gateway, a pig running across their path on the way to church, a dog running between them or the clock striking during the ceremony might wreck their happiness. For the bride to look in the glass after she was attired in her wedding finery was sure to bring ill luck. On the other hand, it was lucky to be followed by a strange dog when going courting, to be touched by the wing of a bat or for the bride to hear a cat sneeze on the eve of her wedding.

Arms and Their Uses.

Jessie—What made you remain such a long time in the conservatory with that young lieutenant? Bessie—Our conversation turned to war, and he was showing me how an officer should use his arms.

Schloss Overclads

and there is just as much style, just as much quality, just as good fit, as you would get from the "merchant tailor," and at a price far below the amount he has been charging you.

Here are two of the most popular styles in long coats. They both possess that quality of Schloss "drapery" that is giving other clothing manufacturers much concern In simple language they "hang right," and the way they hang makes them distinctive in style. The "swagger" is correct, the materials perfect. If you want to get away from the ordinary, buy a Schloss Overclad.

No More Suffering

If you are troubled with indigestion get a bottle of Kodol Dyspepsia Cure and see how quickly it will cure you. Geo. A Thomson of Spencer, Ia., says: "Have had Dyspepsia for twenty years My case was almost hopeless. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure was recommended and I used a few bottles of it and it is the only thing that has relieved me. Would not be without it. Have doctored with local physicians and also at Chicago, and even went to Norway with hopes of getting some relief, but Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is the only remedy that has done me any good, and I heartily recommend it. Every person suffering with Indigestion or Dyspepsia should use it." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

CHRISTMA[illegible] A[illegible] WORLD

BY WILLIAM E.S. FALES.

Copyright 1898, By the author.

It was at a pleasant dinner party at a famous New York hotel, when the conversation turned to the approaching Christmas. The guests were of various callings, but all were qualified to join the Travelers' club, having visited at least three continents.

"What was the oddest Christmas you ever spent?" asked one at a pause in the general chat.

"I certainly can claim the most northerly one," said Captain Leonard Smith, formerly of New Bedford. "It was when I was whaling in the arctic seas and my ship was icebound in the pack about 100 miles north of Alaska. It was a beautiful day, clear, quiet and intensely cold. The stars looked like sharp points, the moon like a clean cut silver disk and the heavens as black as sin. Scientifically it was day, but as a matter of fact it was pure midnight. Our bill of fare was wonderful. We had seething punch, tea and coffee. Our meats were corned beef, corned pork, and, best of all, some polar bear meat and seal blubber. I will not recommend seal blubber for these latitudes, but in the far north, after many months on salt horse and canned goods, it's as delicious as boiled chicken. We had potatoes, carrots, yellow turnips and gingerbread pudding with real raisins in it. There wasn't a dish any one here would look at at the present moment, but all on board vowed it was the finest banquet they could recall."

"If I did not have the most southerly Christmas, I had certainly the hottest," remarked William Pender McLean, once editor of the Hongkong Telegraph, but now a Gothamite. "It was at Port Darwin, in Australia, which, next to the Mohave desert, is probably the hottest spot on earth. December there is equivalent to our June, and the weather of their Christmas is that of our Fourth of July.

"On account of that frightful scourge, the white ant, timber cannot be used in house construction, so that the roofs are made of iron girders and corrugated sheet iron galvanized. This makes a house a veritable oven. The thermometer was way over the 100 mark, and every one in our party was a picture of perspiration and discomfort. But we were determined to celebrate Christmas in good old fashioned style.

"We had a Christmas tree, wreaths and evergreens, and some one hung up a bunch of what he called mistletoe. Luckily we had an ice factory there, and so secured small blocks of comfort at 4 or 5 cents a pound. Every drink, excepting the [illegible] was iced, and every food, excepting the turkey and plum pudding, was cold.

"One poetic youth shook a belt of sleigh bells to arouse the imagination and another read aloud Dickens' immortal Christmas carol. We tried to picture the nipping cold enjoyed by Scrooge and Marley's ghost, but the effort proved futile. Yet the awful heat could not weaken the Christmas spirit, and both dinner and day were unalloyed delight."

"The oddest Christmas of my experience," observed Dr. Edward Bedloe, United States consul at Canton, China, was in 1893, while crossing the Pacific ocean to San Francisco. On the evening of Christmas day we reached the one hundred and eightieth degree of west longitude, where there is no time. Here when a ship is going west an entire day is dropped from the calendar, so that you go to bed Wednesday night and wake up Friday morning. In going east, you reverse the process and repeat the day.

"By extraordinary luck this happened to me, as I said, on Christmas, so that I had two Christmas days the same year. The captain of our good Pacific Mail steamer told us that the event had never happened before in the history of the company and to the best of his knowledge had never happened before to any craft. If that be true, the 60 passengers and 150 crew may well boast of their experience.

"But two consecutive Christmas days are not a success. The dinner of the second day seems insipid by contrast with that of the first, and the merriment of the latter is succeeded by weariness on the former. It is a curious place, that one hundred and eightieth degree of longitude. It plays havoc with grammar and time.

"According to the way you are going you can say truthfully: 'Tomorrow is today and today was yesterday. Today was yesterday and tomorrow will be today. Tomorrow has no yesterday, and yesterday has no tomorrow.' Thoughts like these are confusing, to say the least."

"I can claim credit for the wettest Christmas," cheerily voiced Walter Hutchinson, the traveling agent of a great Liverpool house. "It was in the Malay country near Singapore. The climate there was wittily summed up by the great governor Sir Stamford Raffles as consisting of 'two seasons, the wet and the dry. In the latter it rains every 15 minutes; in the former all the time.' Christmas eve it was [illegible] shower, shower. During the night [illegible]. Christmas morning the [illegible] like a mermaid's paradise. [illegible] a line of unbroken water, [illegible] away seemed a moving [illegible] sheets of water, [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible], and you could almost feel the vegetation growing. The table linen and clothing were damp. The water condensed on furniture and trickled in little streams down the walls. If a boat had sailed into the drawing room, it would have caused no surprise. My host had a blazing fire in his fireplace, a poor imitation of the real article, but it cast a ruddy glow in the room, and, what was better still, made a pleasant draft. We did not think of snow or ice or any other form of water. We had too much of it around us everywhere."

"My oddest Christmas was in Egypt," told the writer. "I was the guest of a dear friend, Dr. James F. Love, pasha, who was attached to the khedive's staff. His home was a palace similar in architecture to those in Italian cities, but colored in Arab suggestions. Within it was truly oriental. Inlaid and arabesqued furniture, relics of Pharaohs, Ptolemies, Phœnicians and Romans, weapons of Saracens, Bedouins and Sudanese, Persian and Afghan rugs, lion and tiger skins, servants yellow, brown and black. Luxury, almost languor, everywhere. Outside the palms nodded and huge Persian rosebushes thrust their glorious branches into the windows. Listless fellahin, scowling Bedouins, stalwart Sudanese, crafty Armenians and sinister Levantines passed to and fro. On the corner Tommy Atkins in scarlet coat and with bayoneted rifle stood on guard, making the traveler thank God for Great Britain. There was a Christmas dinner with an eastern finish. The turkey was stuffed with pistachio nuts and Indian spices, the soup was mulligatawny, the fish was red mullet, the entree was a dainty Turkish pilau, the coffee was the same Mocha as the khedive's, and one of the wines came from the same Alexandrian vineyard which supplied the Cæsars. There was a plum pudding imported from England, and, most wonderful of all, corn bread, New England mince pie and canned stewed terrapin from Philadelphia. In special honor of the day we drank from cups of which the youngest may have seen Mahmoud the Terrible and the oldest might have touched Moses' lips when he was a youth in the royal court of the Nile. One of the period of Cæsar, a humble piece of pottery, may have refreshed Joseph and Mary in their flight into Egypt. Where we sat we were in touch with 4,000 years of history. The very site of the palace may have felt the feet of Alexander, Ptolemy, Cleopatra, Mark Antony, Bishop Cyril and Napoleon. Through an open door we could catch a glimpse of a matchless prie dieu, and in its center a wonderful crucifixion carved by a master's hand looked down upon the place."

THE HOTTEST CHRISTMAS.

"Woodman, Spare That Tree!"

"Don't you think, dear," said Mrs. Firkins, "that it is time we were seeing about getting the Christmas tree for the children?"

"No, my dear, I don't," said Mr. Firkins, with great sternness. "We've got to stop that sort of thing."

"Why?" said Mrs. Firkins.

"Because I've been looking into the matter," returned Firkins, "and I have become impressed with the necessity for the preservation of our forests. It's a very grave matter, my dear; very, grave indeed! No patriotic citizen can after this conscientiously encourage the reckless cutting of pine and hemlock. And I'm not going to help ruin our forests for any old Christmas superstition!"

Then he went down town and spent $5 for a box of Christmas cigars for himself.

For the Sake of Self Protection.

When Mr. Nuwed rushed into his favorite cigar store, the perspiration was rolling down his face, and he looked excited.

"Quick, Charlie!" he said to the young man behind the counter. "Get out a box of Cuba Superbas for me! My wife will be in here in five minutes to buy me a box of cigars, and she'll try to buy 'em for 59 cents. Here's $5. Sell her those Superbas for the 59 cents, old man, and save my life."

And as Mrs. Nuwed stepped timidly in her affectionate but precautionary spouse stepped out the back way.

Lewis Nixon, Shipbuilder and Politician, Helping the Czar.

Lewis Nixon of New York, who has built many torpedo boats for the czar's navy, is regarded as one of the ablest designers and builders of vessels of war in the United States.

To gain such a reputation a man must be a hustler, and he has been one from boyhood. He was born in Leesburg, Va., in 1860. At an early age he showed unusual aptitude for mathematics and the designing of ships, and this led to his appointment to the Naval academy at Annapolis. He stood for four years at the head of his class and graduated in 1882 with highest honors. He was then sent to England by the navy department to study at the Royal Naval college at Greenwich. On his return he became a member of the construction corps of the navy. His skill as a designer of naval craft and his thorough knowledge of the subject proved so valuable to the navy department that he was intrusted with very important work. He resigned from the navy to become superintendent of the Cramp shipyard at Philadelphia. Five years later he resigned this position to establish a shipyard of his own at Elizabethport, N. J. On the formation of the United States Shipbuilding company he became its president. He was talked of in 1901 as Democratic nominee for mayor of New York and for about a year was leader of Tammany Hall.

It is said that more than $30,000,000 has been spent on vessels of the United States navy, which Mr. Nixon designed or whose construction he supervised. Famous among these are the New York, Massachusetts and Oregon.

CHARMING NEGLIGEE GOWN

Fashioned From Cotton Crape and May Be Made at Home.

The shops are full of kimonos of all kinds, ranging in variety from the elegant silk embroidered negligee to those of inexpensive cotton crape. These oriental effects are certainly lovely, but womankind is ever constant to a constant change and demands a variation of even a pretty thing.

The charming little negligee fills the variety bill excellently. It is fashioned from cotton crape—the quality that usually sells for about 15 or 20 cents a yard. The gown is easy to make, and the home dressmaker need have no fear of a successful finish if these rules are followed.

Two lengths of crape are allowed for the fronts and one and a half for

The sleeves are loose puffs finished with double ruffles at the elbow, above which are sewed cord ornaments. Frogs put close together fasten the fronts from neck to hem.

VALUE OF HEIFER BEEF

The British market does not discriminate against heifers as the American market does. In fact, it pays a slight premium for them, claiming that they have more flesh in proportion to bone and finer flesh than steers have, says National Stockman.

That a part of the discrimination against heifers is unwarranted the Iowa experiment station has proved by finishing steers and heifers, selling them on the market and following them through the slaughter house. It was found that while the steers killed slightly better there was not enough difference to justify the premium of a dollar per hundredweight alive, at which they sold. Based on the returns made by the dressed carcass and the byproducts, the relative prices were: Steers, $5.75 per hundredweight; sprayed heifers, $5.37 per hundredweight, and open heifers, $5.32 per hundredweight. No material difference was found in the quality of steer and heifer beef.

The station found also what is generally known—that in feeding heifers will ripen at an earlier age than steers.

Patience In Breeding.

The man with pedigreed cattle needs the quality of patience, says Breeder's Gazette. While he is waiting for the game—his market—let him have patience and put in his time in bettering his herd, getting ready to land his customers when the proper time comes. The tenderfoot in the stock industry frets and fumes, sells out if prices decline, tries another breed, buying when prices are high, neglects the breeding problem and the development of the young stock and at the close declares that "there is no game in the hills."

Alfalfa as a Stock Feed.

E. A. Burnett of the Nebraska experiment station gives in Breeder's Gazette a few station records, showing a comparison of alfalfa with other feeds. Ten steers, 6 months, corn and prairie hay, gained 246 pounds; 10 steers, 6 months, corn and alfalfa hay, gained 359 pounds each; 12 steer calves, 5 months, mixed grain and alfalfa hay, gained 240 pounds each; 6 steers, 5 months, mixed grain and sorghum hay, gained 218 pounds each; 16 lambs, 105 days, corn and alfalfa hay, gained 33 pounds each; 8 lambs, 105 days, corn and prairie hay, gained [illegible] pounds each; 14 lambs, 98 days, corn and alfalfa hay, gained 36 pounds each; 12 lambs, 98 days, corn and sorghum hay, gained 20 pounds each; 5 pigs, 84 days, corn alone, gained 79 pounds each; 5 pigs, 84 days, corn and 20 per cent alfalfa leaves, gained 101 pounds each.

That is the tragedy of every woman's life. She is pretty for a few years and old for a great many.—Mrs. Craigie.

A Defense in a London Paper of American Spelling.

A United States citizen of considerable scientific attainments was good enough to give to a representative of the Daily Graphic what may be called the American view of British spelling.

"I see," he remarked, "that some of the correspondents of the Daily Graphic have been complaining of the disfigurement of English books by American spelling. I should like to tell you that we think our way is right and that your way is wrong, and perhaps your editor will not mind if I venture on a few remarks in defense of our corrections. For example, we write 'favor' and 'honor.' Well, 'favor' and 'honor' are nearer the Latin original than 'favour' and 'honour,' which have acquired their unnecessary 'u' by coming through the French."

"But if they have been spelled 'honour' and 'favour' for centuries, why change them now?"

"Why not? They were as often spelled 'favor' and 'honor' in Shakespeare's day as 'favour' and 'honour.' You must remember that spelling was extremely uncertain in those Elizabethan days, whence we are believed to have drawn the well of English undefiled. Ben Jonson and Shakespeare, for example, spell 'recede' in four other ways—'recead,' 'receade,' 'receed,' 'receede.'"

"Let us leave 'honour.' How do you defend 'center?'"

"Why should you spell it 'centre' when you write 'perimenter' and 'diameter' and when Shakespeare wrote 'scepter?' By history and analogy 'center' is more easily to be justified than 'centre.' Then again," continued the United States citizen, warming up to his subject, "you write 'criticise,' and we write 'criticize,' but our version harks back to the Greek original; you write 'almanac,' but why don't you write 'almanack,' which is more archaic? You blame us for 'program,' but you put down 'dram' without a scruple. Many English people write 'tyre' for 'tire,' which any phililogist knows to be a gross error, and almost every Englishman, for no reason whatever, writes 'waggon' instead of 'wagon.' You know what Horace Greeley said when he was reproached for making that mistake. He said he had been taught spelling in the good old times, when people built 'waggons' heavier."—London Graphic.

A Willing Victim.

"A burnt chile dreads de fire," said Uncle Eben, "but de man dat done los' his money on a hoss race goes aroun' lookin' foh another tip."—Washington Star.

"De easiness wif which some people is fooled," said Uncle Eben, "is what tempts many a man dat might be honest to go astray."—Washington Star.

THE DAIRYMAN

It is a sad fact that so many farmers consider the difference in value between a good cow and a poor cow to be merely the difference in purchasing price, when as a matter of fact it is the difference between profit and loss, writes a Pennsylvania correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman.

In the locality of the writer a cow which sells for $50 when fresh is about the best cow the farmer has and produces not far from 8,000 pounds of milk annually. Another cow equally healthy in body and good in disposition, which sells for $35, yields about 5,000 pounds of milk annually.

Investigators of the subject are almost unanimous in the assertion that 5,000 pounds of milk are required to pay the keep of a cow for one year. It is usually conceded also that the length of a cow's usefulness is ten years.

In this length of time the $35 cow should just about pay for her keep, but leave nothing to her owner as profit. In the same length of time our $50 cow should produce 80,000 pounds of milk. Taking from this amount 50,000 pounds to pay her keep, there are left 30,000 pounds above her expense, which in the creameries should bring at least a cent per pound, thus giving a profit of $300 in ten years, or the time of the cow's usefulness.

Can it not be said, then, with some degree of accuracy that the difference in value between the $35 and the $50 cow is nearly $300.

It is not to be understood from these figures that one should pay $300 for the 8,000 pound cow any more than $35 should be paid for the 5,000 pound cow. Either, however, would be about as sensible as the other. It is intended to mean that the cow which yields only 5,000 pounds of milk annually should never be purchased nor used for dairy purposes and that considerably more than $50 is not an extravagant price to pay for a grade cow yielding annually 8,000 pounds of milk.

Improving the Cows.

When farmers began to select their bulls from pure bred herds possessing these great dairy values, letting the beef question and all side issues take care of themselves, they began to establish improved machinery in the shape of dairy cows.

One Advantage.

Mistakes In Stamps.

By a simple error in the printing of a set of stamps the value is enormously increased to collectors. A short time ago a Dutch stamp was printed yellow instead of blue. A week later these stamps were sold at a great premium. A New Zealand stamp some years ago was printed upside down, and it is now worth a large sum. Among English stamps the old red penny, with the plate No. 255, is valued by collectors, and the small pink halfpenny, with plate No. 9, is not worth less than $20. It is said that the plate of the latter was broken soon after it came into use and was never replaced; hence the value of the few stamps printed from it. It is always a question with amateurs whether to buy their stamps used or unused. But it is safe on a great occasion, such as a jubilee or exposition year, to buy them with the postmark.

To Work Is Honorable.

There has existed and still exists to some extent a false sentiment that labor is degrading or belittling. The contrary is true. An ideal condition of society can come only when every member of it recognizes that he is bound to exrcise whatever skill or strength or faculty he possesses to its full capacity not selfishly or for the sake of gain merely, but for his own happiness and development and for the benefit of all. And there should be no restriction on any one, either legal or social or through association, in regard to his labor or its fruits. If by patient application or natural endowment a man possesses more skill than his fellow or if he chooses to be more industrious he is entitled to the full benefit of it.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Rich In Expectations.

"Well, I wouldn't say 'comparatively,' but 'relatively.' They have a rich uncle of whom they expect great things."—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE FLAMINGO AT HOME.

Observation Has Proved That Both Male and Female Incubate.

Apparently two factors enter into the flamingoes' type of architecture—they must build where there is mud and at the same time erect a structure high enough to protect its contents from any normal rise in the water due to tides or rainfall.

After watching a nesting colony of flamingoes in the Bahamas for "nearly an hour" at a distance of 150 yards Sir Henry Blake stated that the females sat upon the nests, while the males stood up together, evidently near by. My dissections, however, showed that both sexes incubate, while continued observation from the tent revealed the presence of only one bird of the pair in the rookery at the same time. The bird on the nest was relieved late in the afternoon and early in the morning. The one, therefore, which incubated during the day fed at night, and his or her place was taken by another which had been feeding during the day, or, as Peter put it, "I do t'ink, sir, dat when de lady fillymingo leave de nest den de gen'leman fillymingo take her place, sir; yes, sir."

Morning and evening, then, there was much activity in the rookery. Single girds or files of as many as fifty were almost constantly arriving and departing, coming from and radiating to every point of the compass.

Flamingoes in flight resemble no other bird known to me. With legs and neck fully outstretched and the comparatively small wings set halfway between bill and toes, they look as if they might fly backward or forward with equal ease. They progress more rapidly than a heron and when hurried fly with a singular serpentine motion of the neck and body, as if they were crawling in the air.—Century.

Sin has many tools, but a lie is the handle which fits them all.—Holmes.

WHAT THE VICTORY MEANS

Eloquent Speech of Senator Chauncey M. Depew at the Jubilee Dinner Celebrating the Election of Roosevelt and Fairbanks, Under the Auspices of the Republican National Committee and the Manufacturers' Association, at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, Nov. 30, 1904.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen—The voice of the spellbinder is no longer heard in the land. His occupation as public instructor and savior of the Republic is over for four years, unless he can continue his usefulness in the public service. He finds it difficult to resume the hum-drum of daily life after spending his nights on sleeping cars, his days addressing multitudes, after being the conspicuous figure of marching processions, of torchlight parades, of fireworks and booming cannon. I met a Democratic friend of mine who was purchasing of a boy vender in the street Wagner's "Simple Life." He had been both a speaker and a candidate, and I said, "Why this investment?" His answer was, "I badly need its teachings, and after the expenses of my canvass it has come down to my figure in being sold at 5 cents."

The campaigns of 1896 and 1900 were organized and conducted with signal success by the most extraordinary and able political leader who has ever forged to the front. He came almost out of the unknown to carry into a political canvass the principles which had made him one of the leading business men of the country. His courage and tactfulness in defense, his resourcefulness in attack and his comprehensive grasp and control of situations everywhere were marvels of management. We have known but one Mark Hanna. The standard which Hanna set seemed impossible for attainment by any successor. But in the selection of that successor the choice fell upon a young man who possessed abundant experience in public life and in knowledge of public men and who had so impressed himself by his administrative and executive ability upon those in power that he had risen rapidly from a clerkship to the portfolio of a cabinet minister. As silent as Grant, as quick and resourceful as Sherman, with an intuitive knowledge of the states and their leading men, with a close touch with the people and their opinion, intent upon the one purpose of carrying every northern state for his chief, we hail to-night the victor, the Chairman of the National Committee, George B. Cortelyou.

For twelve years, covering three successive campaigns, the most difficult and responsible place on the National Committee, the office of treasurer, has been held by a New Yorker. He brought to the position the credit and experience of a foremost merchant and the breadth of view and charity for the opinions of a statesman. He assumed risks which would have paralyzed less capable and confident men, and the party owes as the result of these three great canvasses a monumental debt of gratitude to Cornelius N. Bliss.

Political speaking is both a faculty and an art. Its cultivation requires years, and it cannot be acquired in a moment. We had two conspicuous examples from very able men. The judicial candidate for President, following the habit of a lifetime upon the Appellate Court, instead of making popular speeches handed down decisions which were reversed by the highest tribunal in the world, the American electorate. The other distinguished jurist, following the methods of a trial judge, was instructing the jury, who, rejecting guidance, interpreted in their own way both the law and the facts. When we consider the enormous interests involved and the ardor and excitement of the campaign, this election is unique in the general satisfaction which has followed the result. The triumph is so great that "on the one side we omit cheers, and on the other there are no tears." It has been one of those rare collisions where after the first shock the passenger finds the train moving on swiftly and safely as before, with his limbs and nerves and baggage secure. There are a sublimity and a grandeur in the spectacle of 14,000,000 voters governing themselves without rancor or riot and with peace and good will which are most impressive.

There is going on today in Russia a revolution which may be one of the milestones of history. One hundred and thirty millions of people are appealing to their autocrat for a share in the government. For the first time in the history of the Empire the appeal is listened to and considered. It seems singular to us, with our experience, that hesitancy and fear should be its attendants both in the palace and among the bureaus which govern the country. However well intentioned the ruling class may be it sees behind any concession the democratic spirit, the destructive forces of socialism and anarchy. But the United States is the living and overwhelming proof of the safety and wisdom of a self governing people. Every day in the year people discuss the action of their representatives and the measures of government. One day in the year they abandon their ordinary avocations to select their President and Vice President, their Congressmen, their Governors and their legislators. One day in the year they instruct those whom they elect in the policies which they must pursue and the laws which they must enact and give to them rules of conduct in domestic and foreign affairs for four years. The next day victors and vanquished accept the result and work harmoniously side by side, alike resuming the industries which mark the peaceful progress and prosperous development of a free people. The farmer's gun at Lexington echoed round the world. For the first time in the history of humanity it carried to subject peoples the lesson of civil and religious liberty, of the equality of all men before the law, and the inspiring principle of our glorious Declaration that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." From the close of the successful struggle which was inaugurated by the farmer's gun at Lexington until this election the world has cared little about the domestic affairs of the United States. We were too isolated. We were of too little account upon the ocean. We were too absorbed in the vital question of slavery which threatened the virility of our free institutions and of a civil war which endangered their existence, too much absorbed in financial, industrial and agricultural recovery from the most wasteful war of modern times.

But in 1904 the Cabinets of the great powers were more deeply concerned as to the verdict of the American people than domestic issues in other nations. The equilibrium of Europe is so delicate that it is maintained only by increasing armaments on the land and navies upon the seas, by force equaling force. The demonstrated power of the United States in the Spanish War suddenly opened the eyes of foreign statesmen to this new factor, which, without injury to itself, could upset the European equilibrium.

For the first time in our elections, not only the press of Great Britain, but of the continent, teemed with dispatches and discussions of the candidates and principles in the electoral contests in the United States. The verdict is accepted as of monumental consequence, when peace reigns in the East, to the competitive industries and markets of the world. It is an unprecedented vote of confidence in the one American whom they know better and respect more than any ruler in Christendom. It is an emphatic affirmation of the principles of the protection of American industries and the retention of our home market for our own people in the interests of our own labor and capital. It is a clear authorization to the Government to retain the Philippine Islands, to carry out in letter and spirit the obligations assumed by the treaty which ceded them to us and to hold them as a base for that entrance upon the markets of the orient by our products and our people which has been secured from competitive nations by the superb diplomacy of Theodore Roosevelt and John Hay. It is an instruction for the continuance by the Government of those internal improvements upon our rivers and harbors and upon our desert lands which shall improve our commerce and add to our homes and to agricultural wealth. Upon each of the three gates of an ancient city was engraved the motto, "Be Bold;" upon the fourth, "Be Not Too Bold." With the minority beaten almost to a standstill, and disintegrated at that, the responsibilities of the victor are greater than ever came to a triumphant party. Our motto must be: In essentials, unity; in nonessentials, liberty. We who have been taught the trade by a century's practice of protection can add to or modify the details of its administration in the way which will improve its efficiency and maintain its popularity.

Mr. John Morley, distinguished in letters and in statesmanship and also for having always, no matter how much it threatened his public life, the courage of the utterances of his opinions, has spoken to us recently in the most friendly way upon the benefits of our defeat and the blessings of free trade. He says that of twenty-two years in Parliament he has been eighteen years on the wrong side of the Speaker's Chair. But he considers the chastening influences which bear upon the minority are of more value than the inspiring effects of Party triumphs. This part of his admonition to Americans is not for those who are gathered here tonight. But he said last Friday evening that he left to us the lesson of the emperor to whom was submitted the controversy of the Neuchatel creed, whether or not there was eternal damnation, and the emperor decided that those who wished to be eternally damned might stay eternally damned. He meant that this was the choice of the protectionists of the United States. Well, my friends, if protectionist United States is hell it is very different from what the theologians have described. It has mighty good society and abundant prosperity, homes and happiness. I am inclined to think, when we look at industrial conditions in Great Britain under free trade and in the United States under protection that our distinguished guest has lived so long in his own country and become so accustomed to surroundings there as heaven that when he gets into the other and real place he does not recognize his blissful environment. A preacher and a deacon were discussing the departure of a deceased member of the congregation who had benefited the world by leaving it. The layman said to his preacher, "I think we ought, if possible, some time to let him know what we think of his life, but," he continued, "unhappily, parson, when you get to heaven you will not find him there." "Well," said the parson, "deacon, then you tell him."

Washington was elected unanimously, and Monroe in a phenomenal era of good feeling, when parties had practically disappeared, received almost the entire electoral vote. Since then the fury of the fight has pervaded every canvass and minimized the triumph. But now the people of the United States, by the unprecedented majority of over 2,000,000, have given a vote of unlimited confidence and a free hand to Theodore Roosevelt.

The habit of politics, which is American, has made our public service both at home and abroad remarkable for the ability and administrative capacity of those who have been changed suddenly from the professions or business to official positions. Good habits and good reputations are common in American public life. It is the achievement of Theodore Roosevelt that he has been distinguished in every office which he has held. As a young member of Assembly he received more notice than the veterans. The Police Commissionership of this city under him attracted the attention of those interested in municipal government all over the country. In the office of Assistant Secretary, in which place is obscured so much of supreme ability, whose merits are never known, he became, in the public eye, almost the whole government. There were divisions, brigades and regiments in Cuba, but in the popular mind and imagination the war is centered in Roosevelt and his Rough Riders. The virile and intelligent manhood of the country has said of him as President, "He is the ideal American." He will live up to and lead policies and measures of the Republican party, but his administration will be so broad and liberal that he will be the President of all parties. Following the admonition of Washington for national strength to command international respect, he has promoted the rapid construction of the navy until we are to be the second great power upon the seas. At the same time he has made the most valuable contribution of the twentieth century to the peace of the world by saving the tribunal at The Hague. The admiration and respect of the world and the affection and confidence of his countrymen are the unique distinctions of Theodore Roosevelt.

Afraid of the Wet.

The crew of a certain life saving station on the New England coast has many times proved itself brave and efficient in time of need, but of late its skill and bravery have been useless, like so much treasure locked in a vault. There has been no wreck. The sea has been kind as a big dog.

Inaction had inevitably bred soft habits of life, and the idle crew had given the summer visitors much to joke about. Their satirical comments were rather ungrateful, for the practice drills of the crew were a part of the entertainment of the seaside resort.

Twice a week the crew pulled out the brass cannon, shot a rope over a dummy mast which is set up on a point of land and then practiced sliding down in the breeches buoy. The small boys of the place were glad to play the part of rescued mariners, and altogether this serious drill, required by law, was a pretty holiday sport.

One rainy day at the appointed time the crew failed to appear at practice. The summer boarders on the hotel veranda waited in vain for the exhibition which should vary the monotony of a dull day. Finally one of them went over to the quarters of the crew to learn the reason.

"I say, aren't you going to practice today?"

"No, sir!"

"Why not?"

Then the brave life saver, hero of many rough seas, made an explanatory gesture toward the weather and said:

"What, in this rain?"

Some Japanese Fans.

Among the folding fans, or ogi, the hi wood fans are the most beautiful. They are painted with flowers and tied with white silk. Anciently they were hung with artificial flowers made of silk. These were the court fans, and different flowers were appropriated by different great families, so that a fan answered the purpose of armorial bearings. Sometimes these beautiful court fans were made of ivory and partly lacquered, thus becoming fine works of art. Folding fans also served the purpose of ensigns in war, and an enormous fan, mita ogi (giant fan) was carried in processions in honor of the sun goddess.

Children and dolls have fans of their own, as exquisite as they are tiny. Dancers and jugglers carry peculiar fans. There is a tea fan (rikin) used at the ancient tea ceremony, a solemn feast among the Japanese. This is not for the undignified purpose of fanning, but for handling little cakes. The ogi fan is vulgarized nowadays by being covered with European advertisements, and till newspapers found their way into Japan it was the only gazette. It was also used as a medium for caricatures, chiefly of western manners.—London Spectator.

Porson's Powers of Memory.

Professor Porson when a boy at Eton school displayed the most astonishing powers of memory. In going up to a lesson one day he was accosted by a boy in the same form.

"Porson, what have you got there?"

"Horace."

"Let me look at it."

Porson handed the book to the boy, who, pretending to return it, substituted another in its place. Being called on by the master, he read and construed Carm. I. X. very regularly.

Observing the class to laugh, the master said: "Porson, you seem to be reading on one side of the page, while I am looking at the other. Pray, whose edition have you?"

Porson hesitated.

"Let me see it," rejoined the master, who, to his great surprise, found it to be an English Ovid. Porson was ordered to go on, which he did easily, correctly and promptly to the end of the ode.

The Model Dairy Cow.

A model dairy cow should answer the following description: Medium size, small head, full and correctly placed eyes, neck long, thin and clean, back of good breath at loins, short legs, large udder, medium sized, well placed teats and plainly defined milk veins. The cow, if well fed, should, of course, give a large quantity of rich milk.—Farm Visitor.

Milk Thoroughly.

It is important that the cows should be thoroughly milked, as the last drawn milk being richer in fat than that which is first drawn it is obvious that the quality is affected if the cows are not milked cleanly. Cows with undeveloped front quarters usually give milk of a lower quality from those quarters, besides less quantity.

The Milker.

The milker should be clean in person and ways and perfectly healthy. If not he may throw off germs of disease in breathing or coughing, says Prairie Farmer. If his breath is contaminated with tobacco the milk cannot entirely escape contamination, and if his hands are soiled the milk must be dirty.

Was in Torture all the Time.

Had Pains in His Back.

Dr. Fenner, Fredonia, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—Some six months ago a friend recommended to me your justly celebrated Kidney and Backache Cure. I was at that time suffering intensely from pains in my back.

My work daily aggravated the complaint and I was in torture all the time. After taking two bottles of your medicine I was relieved and two more completely cured me. I feel like a new man now, thanks to your Remedy, and unhesitatingly recommend it to those suffering as I was. Sincerely yours,

Howard Sproule,

Young Mrs. Vinton looked over the fence that separates her back yard from Mrs. Hardy's, and her pretty face was troubled, says the Chicago News.

"Mrs. Hardy!" she called softly.

"Yes. What is it?" and Mrs. Hardy's matronly figure appeared in her kitchen door.

"I'm so sorry to trouble you," Mrs. Vinton went on, "but will you tell me some good way to cook clay pigeons? Jimmy has just sent me word that he is going out to shoot some. He's bound to bring a lot home, and I haven't the remotest idea how to prepare them."

His Greatest Need.

"What d'ye want?" asked the coachman at the kitchen door.

"De boss o' de house sent me round here," replied the tramp, "an' said you was ter gimme anything I needed."

"All roight. Come out to the stable, an' Oi'll turn the hose on ye."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Snowball a Year.

One of the queer rents paid to the English crown is by the well known Foulis family. This family holds a forest, and the rental of the forest is the delivery of a snowball any day it is asked for. Always the Foulis family must have a snowball ready. It is no trouble to them, either, for Ben Wyvis, a mountain of great height, is in the forest, and the top is always covered with snow.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

Causes of Dairy Failures.

Among the chief causes of failure in milk farming, says an Ohio farmer in American Cultivator, are mixed or crossed breeds, trying to make milk cows of beef cattle, selection of breeds not suited to the purpose, failure to test milk, lack of a special dairy room, which would secure cleaner and more thorough work; failure to read and study about the business. All successful business is made so by the persistent will and purpose of its promoter. The dairy is no exception.

Be Quick.

Not a minute should be lost when a child shows symptoms of croup. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough appears, will prevent the attack. It never fails and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

The Immutability of Temperament.

"That man could own his own home if he were not so extravagant."

"Yes, but what would be the use? If he owned his own home he would simply mortgage it."—Washington Star.

Sufferers from sciatica should not hesitate to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The prompt relief from pain which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

Devon Dairy Cattle.

The Devon is an all round cow, suitable for the private family and suitable for the business dairy, writes J. C. Morris in American Cultivator.

A DEVON COW.

She will do well when kept alone and can take care of herself in a herd. She is a long lived cow. She does not quickly wear out. She is as useful at fifteen years as some cows of five. She has twice the business life in her of almost any other cow.

The color of the Devon is a dark, rich, glossy red. The cows weigh from 700 to 900 pounds, their average weight being about 800 pounds.

The Devon is smaller than the Shorthorn, the Hereford or the Holstein, but larger than the Jersey or the Ayrshire.

Weed Flavor In Butter.

Sometimes cows are starved to eat weeds, while at other times they will eat weeds in spite of all you can do, says L. W. Lighty in National Stockman. Some flavors can be washed out of the cream, but some "hold the fort" against anything we can advise thus far. Among the latter is garlic. To wash out ragweed or some other kindred flavors we run the milk through the separator as usual, then mix with the cream about two and a half times its bulk pure water at 150 degrees and put through the separator again, and the cream will be sweet and normal, but very rich in butter fat. Mixing drugs or nostrums with the milk or cream usually makes matters worse and should not be done.

RECTOR OF ST. LUKE'S,

Ashburnham, Ontario, Testifies to the Good Qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Ashburnham, Ont., April 18, 1903.—I think that it is only right that I should tell you what a wonderful effect Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has produced. The day before Easter I was so distressed with a cold and cough that I did not think to be able to take any duties the next day, as my voice was almost choked by the cough. The same day I received an order from you for a bottle of your Cough Remedy. I at once procured a sample bottle, and took about three doses of the medicine. To my great relief the cough and cold had completely disappeared and I was able to preach three times on Easter day. I know that this rapid and effective cure was due to Cough Remedy. I make this testimony without solicitation, being thankful to have found such a God-sent remedy, Respectfully yours,

To Get Clean Milk.

In order to get clean milk not only should the cow stable be clean and sweet—about ninety-nine out of every hundred are not—so that the breath and blood and tissues of the cow shall not be affected by bad odors, but the milker should be in perfect health, feeds should be sweet and free from must and all water tanks clean and free from green slime and strong odors.—Prairie Farmer.

The Russian Samovar.

Every Russian peasant who is prosperous enough to enjoy the luxury of tea has his samovar. At all inns each visitor is supplied with one. It invariably accompanies the traveler and the picnicker, and even the officers starting out upon a campaign find room for a small one in their baggage. Samovar signifies "self boiler." It is made of brass, lined with tin and with a tube in the center, in which the hot cinders of charcoal are placed after having been ignited. Often a pipe connects it with the chimney, and two friends will sit for hours drinking the boiling hot weak tea.—Harper's Bazar.

Think Straight.

It would be impossible for a lawyer to make a reputation in his profession while continually thinking about medicine or engineering. He must think about law and must study and become thoroughly imbued with its principles. It is unscientific to expect to attain excellence or ability enough to gain distinction in any particular line while holding the mind upon and continually contemplating something radically different.—Success Magazine.

Antiquity of the Acrostic.

The acrostic certainly dates back to about 250 B. C., when the names of the plays in the arguments of the "Comedies" of Plautus were indicated by this ingenious device.

Cicero, about a hundred years later, in his treatise "De Divinatione," says: "The verses of the sibyls are distinguished by an arrangement which the Greeks call acrostic. From the first letters of each verse in order are formed words which express some particular meaning, as in the case of some lines of Ennius, the initial letters of which make 'this Ennius wrote!'"

A similar device was employed in some of the Hebrew psalms, notably in the One Hundred and Nineteenth, where each verse begins with the letter which stands at the title of its separate part throughout the twenty-two divisions of the psalm.

We do not need to give all the reasons why Scott's Emulsion restores the strength and flesh and color of good health to those who suffer from sick blood.

The fact that it is the best preparation of Cod Liver Oil, rich in nutrition, full of healthy stimulation is a suggestion as to why it does what it does.

Scott's Emulsion presents Cod Liver Oil at its best, fullest in strength, least in taste.

Young women in their "teens" are permanently cured of the peculiar disease of the blood which shows itself in paleness, weakness and nervousness, by regular treatment with Scott's Emulsion.

It is a true blood food and is naturally adapted to the cure of the blood sickness from which so many young women suffer.

MEXICAN DRAWN WORK.

The Women Who Make It According to Peon Contract.

The woman who makes drawn work on a Mexican estate is not an independent worker to whom comes the money for all the work her deft hands accomplish. She is a woman whose father or brother or uncle or mother is in debt to the "great don." She can do the drawn work, so the don's agent supplies her with linen or lawn, a frame and the requisite implements and indicates the design that she is to follow, for, though you may not know it, there are fashions in drawn work quite as exclusive and quite as popular as there are in women's hats, for instance. When her work is done that poor woman cannot fare forth to market and offer it for sale. It is by the term of her peon contract perhaps already sold to the "great don," whose tenant she is. Miguel, his agent, takes the work, by now as grimy as the overalls of an engineer. He has kept account of the time the woman has been engaged upon it, and for each of the many days she may have worked he gives her 7, 8, 9, at most 12 cents, but never the full amount unless she be a thorough mistress of her craft.

Once a year the Mexicans for whom the women do this work, somewhat as the sweatshop toilers of Chicago and New York drive their needles for a master, meet in solemn conference and determine what the prices shall be. So great is the popularity of drawn work generally that the supply never equals the demand, and the profits made by the Mexican masters of the drawn work trust, for it is really that, are enormous. The dealer pays these "operatives" what they demand, and they [illegible] much. Therefore the buyer pays $30 for a "cloth" that costs the manufacturer 12 cents a day, labor [illegible], ninety days, to produce.—

POLITE TO THE LAST.

A Maid In Whom Courtesy Was a Ruling Passion.

The Ellen in Samuel Laman Blanchard's excellent but now forgotten book, "Sketches From Life," had probably never heard of Emerson's saying, "There is always time enough for courtesy," but she embodied the great sage's principle in her daily intercourse with her fellow beings. Politeness was a ruling passion with her. To the fisherman's boy she would answer, "Yes, sir; soles, sir, if it is quite convenient." Mr. Blanchard lodged with Ellen's mistress, and one day the manservant of a friend brought a parcel of books.

The man delivered the books into Ellen's hands; then, remembering he was intrusted with a letter also, he searched his pockets in vain for the missive, Ellen, waiting in the hall, was greatly distressed.

"Oh, pray, sir, do not trouble yourself!"

"Trouble myself!" exclaimed the servant. "If I have a letter to deliver I've got to deliver it." And he continued his search.

"I'm sorry to keep you waiting," broke out the apologetic Ellen.

"Why, it is I who am keeping you waiting," returned the puzzled servant. "What are you talking about? Well, I can't find the letter."

"Oh, sir," entreated the maid, "never mind! I dare say it doesn't signify. Another time will do quite as well."

Mr. Blanchard's landlady was taken sick, and every day the lodger's inquiries were answered by the faithful Ellen in somewhat this wise:

"My missis' compliments, sir, and she had a very indifferent night," or, "My missis' compliments, sir, and she feels very weak today."

One sad day when Ellen appeared with the breakfast her eyes were red and her lips quivered. In response to the usual question she sobbed out:

"My missis' compliments, sir, and she died this morning about 8 o'clock."—Youth's Companion.

name implies, is a Wisconsin bred bull, but is owned in New York, where he heads the noted Guernsey herd of Mr. C. C. Taylor at Lawton Station, in Erie county. The picture is reproduced from Hoard's Dairyman.

Dairy Maxims.

Feed your cows twice a day at regular intervals and have pure water and salt always accessible.

A dairy cow does not need as much exercise as a trotting horse.

You do not need a dog to drive up dairy cattle.

A cow with a good escutcheon and nothing else should be butchered.

A cow likes a variety of food. Gratify her taste as often as you can.

THE COLOR OF SNOW.

Although It Appears White, It Is Really a Delicate Blue.

Science, while it gets at the marrow and essence of things, upsets many pretty delusions and fancies. We have been taught from childhood that snow is white, and the impression conveyed to our brains through the medium of sight appears to settle the question beyond the possibility of a doubt, yet, though the judgment of our senses is to the contrary, it can be scientifically demonstrated that its true color is blue. It is a faint and delicate cerulean tint, to be sure, but decided enough to make the scientific declaration that snow is blue one that is positive and irrefutable.

It is a well known fact that pure water in small quantities is perfectly transparent. In large masses it is distinctly blue. Snow is simply the crystals of pure water. The reflection from these is that of all the colors of the rainbow or prism, but by uniting before they reach the eye cause snow to appear to be white. "But," you will say, "the single crystal also appears to be white." This is true beyond question, the reason being that that which appears to be a single crystal is in reality a multitude of microscopic threads, prisms, lines and dots.

In spite of their apparent great diversity in form and shape, which may vary from hairlike crystals to perfect stars of beautiful, delicate and intricate designs, they may be said to be absolutely uniform in original delineation, that of the hexagonal prism. The primitive form is that of a straight needle of ice, radiating from a central nucleus, always at symmetrical distances and at angles of either 60 or 120 degrees. What may on casual examination be taken for exceptions to this rule are the little disks which occasionally fall. These on close examination proved to be six sided planes, the angle still being 120 degrees.

He that falls into sin is a man; that grieves at it is a saint; that boasteth of it is a devil.—Fuller.

I have made a close study of dairy problems during the last fifteen or twenty years, and I think I have picked up some experience by which others should profit, writes a South Dakota farmer in Iowa Homestead. I refer especially to the matter of exciting the dairy cow. In the first place, I have no use for a dog around a dairy farm. One that is properly trained and is looked after by a sensible person may often be useful without being harmful, but where there are a number of individuals looking after the cows I think the dog should be dispensed with.

I have many times noticed a falling off of fully one-half in the quantity of milk given by my cows after they have been given a chase by the dog, while I have in mind a few cases where cows under normal conditions gave six quarts at a milking would not give a pint after being chased by a dog. Now, a repetition of this experience for a few times may occur even after a lactation period of only three or four months.

We have never seen an instance where punishing the dairy cows because they made a mistake did any good, and the milk stool used as a cudgel has been responsible in the past for drying up as many cows as any other factor which we know anything about. The man who does not know better than to kick or pound a cow has no business on a dairy farm, his place being in a mule barn, where lessons in discipline are given alike by the master and by the animal.

Beef or Milk.

Is there more profit in beef that we should reduce our milk flow? I know of no figure to prove such. I was greatly interested in the comparative profits as given by Wisconsin farmers a few years ago, which were invariably on the dairy side. Where milking is a serious objection there may be some debatable ground. There is no doubt that where poor dairy cows are kept up to date beef production would be more satisfactory, but a poor dairy cow feeder would rarely evolve himself into a successful beef feeder at a single turn of the crank. In fact, it is only the educated liberal feeder who could for one moment expect to produce prime beef even upon the best of beef form. And it has never been contended that there was profit in poorly bred beef stock half fed.—Rural New Yorker.

A Notable Baptism.

Do modern records contain anything to equal the following entry in the parish register of Old Whittington, Derbyshire: "Thomas Ashton, son of Mr. Arthur and Mrs. Jane Bulkeley, was baptized July 1, 1744. Godfathers: Edward Downs, esq., great-great-great-great-uncle; Dr. Charles Ashton, great-great-great-uncle; Joseph Ashton, gent., great-great-great-uncle. Godmothers: Mrs. Wood, great-great-great-great-aunt; Mrs. Wainwright, great-great-grandmother; Mrs. Green, great-grandmother. Registered at the request of Joseph Ashton of Landon, gent., who nominated the godfathers and godmothers, believing they are not to be paralleled in England."

Got the Pauls Mixed.

Paul du Chaillu, the one time African explorer, performed a good Samaritan act one night in assisting along the street a very intoxicated stranger. The man told him where his home was, and after considerable difficulty Du Chaillu got him to his door. The bibulous one was very grateful and wanted to know his helper's name. As the explorer did not particularly care to give his name in full, he merely replied that it was Paul. "So it'sh—hic—Paul, ish it?" hiccoughed the man, and then, after some moments of apparent thought, inquired solicitously, "[illegible] ole man, did y'ever get any [illegible] anshler to those lo-ong lettersh y' [illegible] to th' Ephesians?"

SCARCITY OF WATER

Manufacturing Industries in this City Confronted with a Serious Condition—Users of Water-Power Suffer.

The low water in the Oswego River at this season of the year is a matter of the gravest concern to the manufacturing industries of Fulton, and the aggravating part of it is that it is beyond the reach of any remedial measure. Such a condition means practically the temporary closing of industries that are not equipped with an auxiliary steam plant, and that applies especially to the manufacturers of pulp and paper stock and the flour mills. This will not alone bear especially hard on those who have large capital invested, but on the users and consumers of the products. The paper industry is kindred to many others that will suffer in like proportion.

Fulton's many industries are largely dependent on water-power, and any adverse condition arising which curtails their earning capacity, means practical stagnation of its business interests.

This is extremely unfortunate at this season of the year, when there is generally an abundance of water and the mills are run to their fullest capacity. There is no lack of orders, but it can readily be understood that the expense of production, even to those who are fortunate enough to have steam power, will necessarily be increased many fold, paring the profits down to the narrowest margin.

The employes of the mills, too, [illegible] ... dry, the tributaries to the river furnished little or no supply, and now when they are frozen up, even if a thaw should occur, the relief would be only temporary, as there is no water stored up.

During the Summer months the dry periods are not unexpected, and advantage is taken of them to effect needed repairs to mills; orders are then booked in the confident expectation that copious rains in the Fall will furnish sufficient water-power to assure a reasonable profit for the capital invested in the milling industry.

Not within the memory of the oldest inhabitant has such a condition confronted our manufacturers. It is appalling, too, when there is no business depression and the demand for manufactured products is so extensive—when our commercial industries should be running to their fullest capacity—that Fulton should be menaced with such a serious condition.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

Various Matters of Importance Discussed—An Interesting and Instructive Session.

The Current Events club met on Monday evening at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Sawtelle.

The matter of the next meeting was discussed quite fully. It was found that the meeting regularly would come on Dec. 26th and, as that will be the legal Christmas day, it was moved and carried that we postpone the meeting until Tuesday evening, Dec. 27th. Mr. Sawtelle at this point called the attention of the meeting to the fact that the men of the Presbyterian church were going to have an entertainment either on Tuesday or Wednesday, and the matter was left to the Executive Committee. If there is any change the committee is to notify the members.

Mr. L. A. Emerick was introduced by the leader of the evening, Mr. F. D. VanWagenen, and he took up and explained in detail the Chadwick case. A very interesting talk it was indeed. Mr. Emerick called attention to the facts that the different parties interested were open to criticism; the banker Reynolds for signing a receipt without knowing what securities were contained in the sealed package in question; the Oberlin Bank was open to criticism for loaning the woman more than is legally allowed.

Mr. E. R. Redhead took up the President's message and discussed a few special features. First, the recommendation for the block system on all railroads. Second, universal naturalization laws. Third, the power of the Interstate Commission being increased so as to regulate interstate rates.

In this connection Mr. Duell called attention to the fact that while the President was strongly in favor of organized labor, yet he recommended that the government employes should not organize.

Mr. Taft criticised the President for [illegible] ... the "Outlook" in which he tried to explain why the Democratic party was defeated. It was remarked as a preface that Mr. Bryan, if he was anything, was sincere. He discussed this entire question from the moral phase of Democratic politics, and the sum of the whole thing seemed to be that the Democratic party had been too conservative in the recent campaign.

Dr. Vincent discussed ably the subject of Frenzied Finance as illustrated in the articles in "Everybody's Magazine" by Thomas W. Lawson of Boston.

Mr. Van Wagenen closed a very interesting meeting indeed by noting the recent deaths of Mrs. Gilbert and Mme. Janischek. He also mentioned the following:

The Japanese have taken 203 Meter Hill and have practically annihilated the Russian fleet in the harbor of Port Arthur.

Tolstoi approves most heartily of any improvement in the condition of the Russian people. He says that they are not ready yet for a constitutional form of government; are not fitted in any way for it.

The meeting of the Federation of Labor and the decision of the Supreme Court of New York State declaring unconstitutional the eight-hour law on municipal work followed.

Everyone went home satisfied that they had a most pleasant and profitable evening.

$75,000 BUILDING.

Congressman Knapp Asks for an Appropriation for Public Building for Fulton.

An Associated Press dispatch from Washington conveys the information that Congressman Charles L. Knapp of this district, on Dec. 8, introduced a bill into the House of Representatives calling for an appropriation of $75,000 for the erection of a public building for this city.

Debits and Credits.

"Yes," said Mrs. Millionaire proudly, "we married our daughter very well, I think. We gave her a dowry of $2,000,000, and you have no idea how many noblemen there were after her. She's now a countess."

"Yes, I read it all in the papers," returned Mrs. Cheerful smilingly. "We didn't give our daughter any dowry at all, and she is very happily married to a successful young business man."

"No dowry?"

"None. It wasn't necessary. In the matrimonial market, you know, it depends on the girl whether she is accepted as a debit or a credit."

After the full meaning of this had percolated through the intellect of Mrs. Millionaire a coldness seemed to arise and make itself felt.—New York Press.

The Bird Sentinel.

I was interested one Sunday in watching the movements of birds. Crumbling a biscuit, I threw it out, sat down on the piazza and awaited results, writes a contributor to the Boston Record.

It was not long after the birds came and helped themselves before a cat appeared. Then a warning note was sounded by a bird, evidently on guard on the top of the piazza, where he could survey the whole scene. At his warning every bird disappeared and remained in hiding until a reassuring note was heard from the little sentry posted on the piazza roof.

You will never be trusted if you do more to gain an enemy than to serve a friend.—Bulwer.

SANTA CLAUS WRITES A LETTER.

He Tells Fultonians Where They Can Secure Three Splendid Gifts For the Price of One.

Dear People: I have had so many letters written to me for gifts that I have made arrangements with J. C. O'Brien to give you all one-third rates on all purchases of holiday gifts, and I told him where he could secure a carload of superb goods at less than half price, so that he would not lose heavily by the arrangement. Now I will tell you what to buy and where to buy. All coats for ladies will be sold for $9.87 during this month, regardless of former price. Seventy-five fur sets, straight from a large fur importing house in New York city, which will retire from business on January 1, are on sale at a slight increase over the purchase price, which was far below the value of the goods. They are Russian and American sable, German and Alaska fox, and other choice furs. Think what gifts they would make!

In the carload of holiday goods just unpacked you will find what you want for everyone on your list. Cut glass—second to none—at half price. Venetian glass, gold traced, at less than half price. Servian vases, Moriage ware, Japanese bric-a-brac, all in immense quantities and so beautiful and cheap that you cannot help bestowing them upon your friends. Handkerchiefs, too, so sheer and fine and at such amazingly low prices that you can give three where you usually gave but one.

I tell you, people, that I never saw such bargains, and I have traveled the wide world over. Take the advice of an old St. Nicholas, and go to the O'Brien store, ... [illegible]

A Little in Doubt.

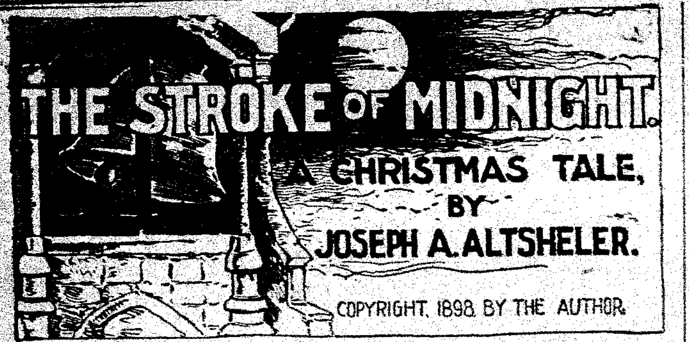
ANDREW CARNEGIE says: "I think THE WORLD'S WORK [illegible]"



The battle trod to and fro in the darkness and the whirling snow; tiny blue flames, nearly smothered by the night and the melting flakes, shot up from the half burned houses, flickered awhile and then went out, to be succeeded by others as feeble; rifle shots rattled in irregular volleys, and the smoke from the gun muzzles increased the obscurity which was scarcely broken by the flashes from the weapons and the faint light of the smoldering timbers.

The wind with an edge of ice whirled here and there and impartially drove gusts of snow into the faces of the combatants, but could not dim their rage. Passion and courage were equal in each, and though the main battle had passed on their own little corner of the struggle was as important to them as the fate of great armies, and neither would yield the ground which had already become where they fought a slippery mire of red mud and snow.

Fleming, the first lieutenant, was shouting to his men and gesticulating with his sword, broken at the point by a rifle ball, though he had never noticed it. The big flakes struck in his eyes and blinded him at times, but he fought on, encouraging his soldiers, struggling through the mire, and watching the combat as best he could by the feeble light of the burned buildings. The difficulties of the battlefield, the snow, the darkness, the fierce resistance of the enemy, his inability to drive them back, filled him with the unreasoning rage of youth. A man who despised oaths he began to use them with rapidity and unction and was unconscious of doing so. But his soldiers needed no spur from their commander. Evans, the second lieutenant, a year younger than himself—Fleming had reached the honorable age of 20—was by his side, firing with his pistols at the flitting black forms that opposed them, and around the two lieutenants fought a little band of splashed and begrimed men with a courage and energy equal to those of their leaders.

A wall of a house fell on a bed of live coals and the timbers blazed up with sudden vividness, cutting through the darkness and casting a distorting light over the snow, the ruined village and the fighting men.

Fleming paused for a moment to grasp his field of battle by the new light that had come. The flames magnified some objects, diminished others and made the whole unreal and fantastic. The forms of his enemies wavered as the flames flickered and grew to gigantic size, the bloody spots on the snow spread and united, and the scorched rafters of an abandoned house made an ugly black tracery in the sky. In the momentary stillness that had seized them all Fleming heard the sputtering of the snowflakes as they fell in the flames.

Being able now to see his battlefield, the lieutenant knew that the little church which stood somewhat to his right was its key, and, shouting to his men to follow, he rushed forward that he might seize it at once and cut off his enemy.

The soldiers fired a volley and dashed toward the church, but the leader of the hostile band was as quick of eye and as ready of action as Fleming, and when the lieutenant and his men entered one door of the church their antagonists dashed in at the other.

Fleming's wrath flamed to its highest pitch. It seemed a personal injustice to himself that his foe should be so stubborn and so prompt, and his resolve to overcome him grew with his anger. He stopped just inside the door, and his men gathered around him. The room was dim, but Fleming saw the outlines of the benches and at the far end the pulpit. The building, until then outside the line of battle, seemed to have been untouched. The light from the blazing house flared in at the window and fell across the faces of his enemies, who were entering at the farther door. Neither side gave a thought to the character of the place, but both knew that a fierce struggle was sure to follow for the possession of so strong a fort as a brick building, and they prepared at once for the issue. Three or four of the heavy wooden benches, which served as pews hastily thrown together, made a good breastwork, and standing behind it Fleming and his men waited to see what the enemy would do.

The hostile leader waited, too, perhaps with the same purpose, and again the building was silent. The fallen wall was burning finely and the light from it now shone through the window with a steady radiance and drove the dusk from the room.

Fleming listened intently and heard nothing from without. The battle, save for his own part in it, seemed to have ended or to have gone far away. The snow, driven against the window panes, gleamed red in the light of the flames, and the wind increased in violence. All this was but the affair of a moment, and then Fleming turned the full attention of eye and ear to his enemy. That the two little bands had been left to fight their battle alone was no inducement to him to draw away from the conflict; rather it increased his desire to triumph, for the field was now [illegible]. Evans whispered to him that they must rush the rebels, and Fleming, nodding his head, gave a quick command to the men, who leaped over the hasty fortification that they no longer desired and rushed upon their enemies, the lieutenants, as always, at their head.

Fleming knew that it was a bold plan allied to rashness, but he trusted that success would come from its suddenness and that he would be upon his antagonists before they could recover from their surprise and shoot down his men. A few swift steps took him across the room. He was filled with a fierce exultation, for he believed that he was about to triumph, but even in the wild rush of the moment and with a mind concentrated upon the impending struggle, he observed the room again, the rows of wooden benches, the aisles, the pulpit at the far end, the stairway that led to the second floor, and the light through the window flaring redly over everything. Then the wild rush carried his little band upon the enemy, and, as he had hoped, the surprise of the sudden movement made its success.

A few scattering shots that went wild were fired at them, and then they were over the benches and in the midst of the triumphant combat. Fleming was burning with the battle fever, and again he began to shout to his men and utter oaths of which he was unconscious, striking with his sword and calling at times upon his antagonists to yield.

He found that he was opposed by soldiers as valiant as his own. Beaten by numbers, those who were not wounded or taken by force refused to surrender, and wheeling about as if by a sign from their leader rushed up the stairway, which began almost at their feet, and sought refuge and a second defense on the next floor.

Disappointment now mingled with Fleming's anger, but neither emotion caused him to forget for the moment his military prudence. Hastily dispatching a few of his men to keep watch at the windows outside and prevent escape there, he sprang up the stairway with the others in quick pursuit of the fugitives. Rage and excitement blinded him to the danger of shots from above, and Evans, as eager as himself, pressed on by his side, while the men crowded close after, the wooden stairway giving a dull echo under their footsteps.

The light from the flames of the burning village did not reach the second floor, and Fleming stood for a moment or two trying to accustom his eyes to the dusk. As the pupils distended he saw the last of the fugitives disappearing in a small room, and then he heard the slamming of the door and noises which indicated preparations for defense. A little gray haired man in civilian's attire and with a face of fright sprang from a dark corner where he had been crouching and darted to a window, at which he pulled vainly with trembling fingers as if he would open it and spring out.

Fleming looked quickly about that he might seize the salient points of this last battlefield. He paid no attention to the civilian, supposing him to be the sexton or some one else in charge of the building who had hidden there in fright while the fight was going on below. As his men paused with him to await his orders he felt for a sudden moment the solemn stillness of the place and its character, but the silence was quickly interrupted by a beating on the door of the room in which the fugitives had taken refuge, and he knew that they were breaking loopholes for their rifles. At the sound his passion, which had died for an instant, flamed up again, and he hastily drew his men to a far corner where the rifle barrels, even when thrust through the holes in the door, could not secure their range. Then while he whispered with Evans and the two tried to decide what would be best to do in the doubtful situation the curious silence which had in it so much that was solemn and impressive fell again over the place.

The defenders had broken the holes in the door and were motionless and silent, awaiting the advance of their assailants, who still stood in their corner hesitating. Only faint gleams of light came through the panes, but the eyes of the soldiers became accustomed to the dusk. The gray haired little man had ceased his efforts to open the window and stood with his back to it, his face expressing his fright and horror at what had happened and what was about to happen.

Fleming heard the ticking of a clock somewhere over his head, but he did not look up to see. In his indecision his eyes wandered to the civilian, and he was amused at the old man's fright. But, then, he had no business there and must take his chances. The fight could not pause for him. Yet the wrinkled face and the pinched features attracted and held Fleming's eyes, and he wondered in a vague way what the man would do—whether he would crouch again in the corner or make another effort to escape by the window. The man's eyes met his own and stared into them with a gaze that seemed to the young lieutenant to be full of reproach and upbraiding.

"STOP!" SAID THE OLD MAN IN A FIRM VOICE.

Fleming could not account for the influence of this stranger, and the sudden strength of the gaze that met his own and held him back from his purpose, for the figure of the old man was not commanding, and his fright was obvious. He was about to order him down the stairs, but at that moment the civilian raised himself up, and his eyes grew bolder.

Fleming with the quickness of intuition saw that this old man whom he had despised felt one of those sudden inspirations of courage which sometimes come even to cowards. He saw the expansion of the figure, the brightening of the eye, the look that was prophetic, and again he paused as he was about to give a command.

"Stop!" said the old man in a firm voice, raising his hand and pointing an accusing forefinger at Fleming.

The lieutenant hesitated and looked at him in wonder.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"Stop, I say!" repeated the old man.

Fleming laughed and with contempt. He had thrown off the momentary influence of the accusing look, and his mind returned with full force to his original purpose, the destruction of the rebels who had intrenched themselves in the room.

"Out of the way!" he exclaimed angrily. "We're going to storm that room in there, and we will not be responsible for stray bullets."

The old man did not shrink back at the officer's emphatic command. His eyes were shining with a feverish excitement and his courage seemed to grow as the fever rose.

"Stop, I tell you again!" he shouted. "This is murder that you and those in that room, too, are bent upon!"

"It is war!"

"It is not war! The battle is over, and you fight here without purpose! What is the possession of this church to either of you? And to fight, too, at such a time!"

Fleming looked scornfully at the old man who yet held his attention and impressed him.

"At such a time?" he repeated. "It's true that it's night, and the snow is falling, but we're not parlor soldiers to seek our tents because of a winter night."

"It's more than a winter night," said the old man ster[illegible] his accusing finger again and pointing it at Fleming. "Listen!"

The unseen clock overhead began to strike, and Fleming and his men, awed despite themselves by the old man's manner, counted the strokes under their breath. One, two, three, they counted, and on up to 12, standing in silence and making no movement, as if some new power possessed them. Nor did any sound come from the room in which their enemies lay, and Fleming believed that they, too, had been listening to the old man's words. Then he grew angry at himself and sought to shake off the spell.

"Did you hear that?" asked the old man.

"Yes, I heard it," said Fleming, "and I heard nothing but a clock striking midnight."

"But what a midnight!" exclaimed the other. "And do you not know what morning has begun?"

Without waiting for an answer, he seized a rope which hung by the wall and as he pulled with strong and practiced hand a bell far above them began to ring. Its mellow note, steady and strong, echoed through the night, which heard no other sound now, and rose and fell in a song of joy. Listening to its music, Fleming forgot for a moment the wildness of the winter night and the lust of battle which had burned so fiercely in his veins.

"Listen, listen, I tell you!" exclaimed the old man, his face transfigured by the ecstasy which possessed him. "Is not that a better sound than the crack of rifles and the groans of dying men? Again, I ask you do you not know what morning has begun?"

"How should I know?" asked Fleming. "How can any man who has been marching and fighting and skirmishing for weeks keep track of time?"

"This is the night of the 24th of December, and it's Christmas morning now," cried the old man, "the night when Christ was born and came into the world to preach forgiveness and to teach men to love one another! I've rung that morning in with this bell every year for the last 50 years, and I came here tonight to do it again, though you've followed me and fought in the church itself. Stand back, I tell you! You shall not fight here with the bells of Christmas morning ringing in your ears. God would strike you dead for it."

It seemed to Fleming that the man's manner now had the dignity and force that we ascribe to the Hebrew prophets of old. His littleness had disappeared, he showed no semblance of fear, and his eyes blazed with the force of the spirit that was in him.

The notes of the bell rose far above the whistle of the wind, and even in the presence of those who carried arms in their hands to kill told of peace on earth and good will to men. The sanguinary scenes of the night passed out of Fleming's mind for a moment, and in their place he saw the peaceful Christmas morning of his childhood. Then he looked weakly at Evans, as if he would seek counsel from his second in command.

"Lower your weapons!" cried the old man, who never ceased his ringing. "I tell you again that God will strike you dead if you fight in his house at such a time. What a sacrilege, and you but boys!"

The fever in Fleming's veins was dying. He looked at his men and saw that the lust of combat was passing from them. In his ears rang the joyful note of the bell telling him that Christ was born and had come on earth to teach peace and good will among men. He turned his eyes from his men to those of the sexton, who pulled the rope with regular and rhythmic stroke, and they fell before the gaze of the old man.

"And you purpose to fight here!" flamed out the old man. "You should be down on your knees and thank God that you are alive this Christmas morning. Listen to my bell! It is declaring peace, and no other voice shall be heard in this place."

The last touch of the battle fever passed from Fleming's veins, but he looked questioningly at the door behind which his enemies had fortified themselves. The old man's eyes followed his.

"They, too, shall put down their guns while the Christmas bell is ringing," he cried. "Come out! These men give their promise that they will not fire upon you."

"Yes, we promise," said Fleming mechanically, his mind still wandering back with the notes of the bell to other Christmas mornings.

"There is nothing to fight for here, anyway," said Evans in a low voice.

"Not now at least," replied Fleming in the same tone.

The door in front of them was opened, and their enemies, gun muzzles down, came slowly out. Fleming and Evans saluted them with military courtesy.

"About face!" said Fleming to his men.

Then with their lieutenants at their head the little band marched down the stairway and through the church and out into the snow and past the smoldering embers of the houses to their camp. And above them and around them the clear notes of the bell were proclaiming that Christ was born on earth and peace and good will should reign among men.

Santa Claus' Predicament.

Santa Claus seemed upset. He stood off, put his hands in his pockets and gazed in puzzled despair at the row of long limp stockings. Here was a sticker. He went up to one, turned it inside out, inspected it, twisted it, counted its checks and again stood off and looked at it in an agony of despairing uncertainty. "Well, I'll be blowed," said Santa, "if in these days of bicycling, I can tell which is a man's and which is a woman's." Then a sudden smile wreathed round his troubled face. "But I guess a 49 cent bicycle lamp will do in either case!"

TRUSTING TO FATE.

An Incident That Gives an Insight Into Russian Character.

A few years ago I was taking a country walk in Kovno. The road lay through a dense forest, and the day was oppressively hot. I arrived at last at a crossroad and sat down under the shade of the trees to rest. A signpost pointed its two arms down the converging roads. On one of them was inscribed "14 versts to Janova," on the other "17 versts to Shadowa." Presently the creaking of wheels and the slow "clop, clop" of a horse's hoofs on the road behind roused me. A cart piled high with tinware was coming down the road, with the driver perched on the top of the load.

"Good day, brother," I called out as the cart, with its sorry horse, came abreast of me. The man returned my salute, and the horse, glad of any excuse to rest his weary legs, came to a standstill in the middle of the road.

"Which way are you going?" I asked.

"To Janova. There is a market there tomorrow."

"But there is also a market in Shadowa," I answered, "and it is a more important place than Janova."

"So it is, so it is," the driver replied, with perfect indifference.

"What have you for sale?"

"Plenty of good tinware, as you can see, brother. I have worked for six weeks to make this cartload."

"Well, good luck to you and your tinware," I said, pulling and eating the berries within reach. "Will you take it to Janova or Shadowa?"

The man picked up the bit of cord which served as reins and prepared to go on.

"I shall leave that to my horse," he answered callously.

The lumbering wagon moved off and finally passed out of sight down the Janova road, which the horse had elected to take.—St. James' Gazette.

Memorial to a Robber.

In the little town of Forlimpopoli, near Bologna, there is a memorial tablet in the Municipal theater to the memory of a famous robber chieftain named Passatore. The reason why the theater is the home of his memorial is that in it was performed his most famous exploit. In September, 1854, while one of Rossini's operas was being performed in the presence of all the local beauty and fashion, Passatore and his band "held up" the audience and robbed them of all their valuables to the last penny.

Governors Van Sant, Cummins and La Follette and Their Crusade.

The question of regulation of railroad freight rates so as to prevent unfair discrimination is one that is assuming much importance in some parts of the United States, especially in the states of the northwest. The success of the movement against mergers like that consummated in the formation of the Northern Securities company has encouraged business men of several commonwealths, under the lead of their executives, to plan for a campaign against combinations of capitalists and railroad managers by which discriminatory rates are put in force, to the great injury of the industries and individual merchants and manufacturers and farmers who do not happen to be in the favored class. It is the hope of those prominent in the movement that congress may take some action extending the powers of the interstate commerce commission so as to make that body competent to fix and enforce impartial rates.

The leaders in this movement are Governor Samuel R. Van Sant of Minnesota, who led the successful movement against the Northern Securities merger; Governor Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, whose advocacy of tariff revision has directed attention to him, and Governor Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin, whose re-election in spite of a split in his party and because of reforms for which he stood has made him a national figure.

According to Governor Van Sant the battle against the Northern Securities merger was a mere incident in a great struggle against unfairness in transportation methods which will be protracted perhaps for years to come. What is needed in the first place, he says, is an amendment of the law which will give the government supervision over railroad freight rates when found to be unreasonable. He urges that when managers of transportation lines which have established a monopoly in their territory are able to meet and fix rates for their own benefit and to the injury of shippers, and there is no redress for the grievances created, a condition exists which should be changed as soon as possible.

All three of the state executives concerned in this movement are known for their vigorous hostility to the undue agressiveness of railroad corporations. Governor Van Sant was born in Rock Island, Ill., in 1844, is a veteran of the civil war and for some years was engaged in the steamboat business.

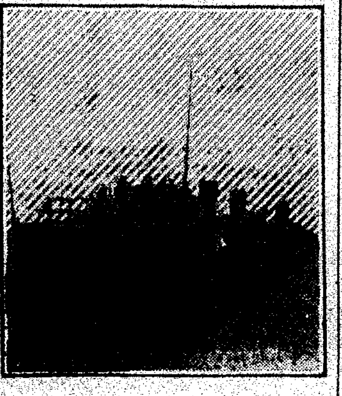
TORPEDO BOAT TEST

FIVE TO MAKE LONG VOYAGE TO THE PHILIPPINES.

The Dupont's Wonderful Record of 12,000 Miles' Steaming Without a Stop For Repairs—Long Cruises Severe Ordeal For Officers and Crews.

The torpedo boat Dupont and her sister ship, the Porter, are craft of which the officers of the United States navy are especially proud. Much is expected from them in the test cruise which is to be made from the Atlantic seaboard to the Philippines by five torpedo boats. The Dupont has amply demonstrated her seaworthy qualities already. She made a trip during the Spanish war which caused her to be much talked about, steaming 12,000 miles without a single halt for repairs. Both the Dupont and the Porter did important work off the Cuban coast during the war with Spain. The other torpedo boats which are to participate in the endurance test of a voyage to the Philippines are the Bailey, Barney and Biddle. All are capable of very high speed, and the Dupont and Porter are ranked by many at the head of their class. Both were built in 1895, have a length of 175 feet, 17.5 feet beam and mean draft of 6.5 feet. They have each a displacement of 165 tons, three one-pounder guns and three eighteen inch torpedo tubes. They were built by the Herreshoff company, famous for its racing yachts. The Dupont was given her official trial for speed in August, 1897. Admiral Dewey, then commodore and president of the naval board of inspection, congratulated the Herreshoffs at the conclusion of the performance on producing an ocean flier of such stanch qualities.

The Dupont made an average speed on its official trial of 28.6 knots, or about 33 statute miles. At one point on her course she made fully 30 knots, and with safety valves popping at 225 pounds and great sheets of flame coming from her stacks she sped on like a swift messenger of destruction, and that, indeed, is what she is designed to be. The first 12 miles were made in



THE TORPEDO BOAT DUPONT.

24 minutes 32½ seconds, or at a 29.4 gait. Those on deck had to brace themselves against the wind.

In the trip to the Philippines no such speed as this will be maintained. It is probable that the flotilla will steam only about nine or ten miles an hour most of the time, so as to cause those on board as little discomfort as possible from the rolling of the light craft in the seas and the quivering and vibration incident to fast travel with small vessels built as the torpedo boats are. Each ship of the little flotilla will carry two officers and twenty-six men except the Bailey, the flagship of the fleet, which will carry three officers and fifty-six men. To accommodate so many men, the armor and the coal the boats are necessarily crowded. The Dupont and Porter have a coal banker capacity of sixty tons each, and their steaming radius is 3,000 knots when proceeding at the rate of approximately fourteen miles an hour. The slower the speed the less is the amount of fuel consumed. It is believed that the voyage can be made in perfect safety so far as the problem of coal supply is concerned.

A cruise of this kind is a severe test of the endurance of the men on board the ships, for they have to put up with many discomforts. The vibration of the vessels when under good headway makes sleep difficult, the rolling of the light craft in the waves often makes serving of freshly cooked food impracticable, and other conditions inevitable on such a voyage add to the hardships to be suffered. To give the men opportunity to maintain their health it is expected that more than one-half of the time of the voyage will be spent in port.

Those taken on this cruise will all be young men, mostly from twenty-five to thirty, as none but those in the vigor of youth could stand the fatigue and hardships which the voyage will involve. Their digestions must be such that a prolonged diet of canned meat and vegetables will have no terrors for them. It is the policy of the navy department to give the officers and men of the service experience with the problems liable to be met in different quarters of the world where there are American interests to protect. In accordance with this policy, as well as for the purpose of a test cruise, the torpedo boat flotilla is being sent on its long voyage.

The five boats cost the United States about $1,000,000. The most expensive member of the fleet is the Bailey, which cost $210,000, exclusive of her armament. She is the largest of the five vessels, being 205 feet in length by 19 feet beam and having a draft of about 7 feet. She has a displacement of 280 tons, and her engines are capable of driving her through the water at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour.

THE SON OF HIS FATHER.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Is Following In Footsteps of His Sire.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is a chip of the old block. He has his father's abstemious habits and his habit of giving part of his time and considerable of his money to the advancement of religious and charitable work.

In one respect, however, Mr. Rockefeller junior differs from his wealthy parent. He has not as yet felt the necessity of offering a million dollars for a new stomach. Young Rockefeller and his wife spent the last Thanksgiving day at the Rockefeller home near Tarrytown, N. Y., known as Pocantico hills, and an old fashioned turkey dinner was served, of which the senior Rockefeller partook, it is said, with as much gusto as though no such thing as indigestion were known. He attributes the improvement in his appetite largely to his devotion to golf and other exercise. His son is proceeding in a way to keep his stomach healthy and his whole physical system in right condition to enable him to manage successfully the hundreds of millions of dollars which his father expects to leave him. He eats thirty cent luncheons and is a total stranger to wines and cigars. He takes long walks, chops wood and indulges moderately in several forms of sport.

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was Miss Abby G. Aldrich, daughter of Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, who is several times a millionaire. She met young Rockefeller when he was a youth of about twenty and a student at Brown university, Providence, to which the head of the Rockefeller family has contributed a great deal of money. The Rockefellers have strict ideas on amusements and do not go in much for dancing, but it is said that when the quiet, sober student who is heir to the Standard Oil millions first saw Miss Aldrich at a college dance, the belle of the evening and besieged by would be partners, he showed that he could lead a cotillon, if he chose, as well as he can lead a Bible class.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is now twenty-seven years of age, and during his first year in business he cleared over a million on his own account.

GENERAL KAULBARS.

Sketch of the Commander of the New Russian First Army.

General Baron Kaulbars, who will command the First Russian army when the re-organization of the forces in the field in Manchuria is completed, is a bronzed veteran of sixty winters and a man of great energy and resource. The reconstituted First army will include the First, Tenth and Seventeenth European corps, one corps of rifles and two other corps to be sent out later on. The Second army, under command of General Gripenberg, will consist of the Eighth, Third and Sixteenth corps, one rifle corps and two other corps not yet designated. Six Siberian corps under General Linevitch will make up the Third army. It is understood that General Kuropatkin will remain in the field in chief command of the three armies. Their combined strength will, it is expected, be something over 500,000 men. It will be spring before the Russian plans of reorganization can be completed.

General Kaulbars is the personal choice of General Kuropatkin for the command of the First army. He was commander of a corps during the Boxer insurrection in China and was at one time the czar's diplomatic agent in Bulgaria. In personal appearance General Kaulbars is tall and soldierly and well preserved. His heavy white mustache gives him a striking aspect. He is now at St. Petersburg studying the details of the campaign with the general staff.

BRAVE MME. STOESSEL.

As Stout Hearted as Her Husband. Idolized by Port Arthur Soldiers.

The wife of General Anatole Stoessel, the commander and defender of Port Arthur, has proved the heroine of the siege of that fortress. She has refused from the beginning of the investment of the city to leave her husband's side, no matter how great the hardship and danger incident to remaining. Wishing to serve the soldiers of the garrison, she took charge of the ambulance service and in the discharge of her work often exposed herself to danger. One day last August while ministering to a wounded soldier a shell exploded near her, and a piece of it struck her in the shoulder.

During her visits to the different parts of the fortress the garrison had come to regard her as their protector and as one on whose safety the fate of Port Arthur might depend. The news that she was wounded and perhaps dying caused a feeling of gloom among the warriors for the czar. They were filled with joy when five days after entering the hospital she left it and made a round of the forts to assure the garrison of her safety. Brave men were moved to tears, and many kissed the hem of her garment as she passed by.

Looked Honest Anyway.

A member of the Kansas City board of trade called a newsboy in front of the Exchange building the other afternoon to buy a paper and then discovered that he had no small change with which to pay for it. He wanted the paper, so he asked the boy to trust him. "I'll pay you tomorrow," he said. The boy looked him over. "Yer on the board of trade, ain't you?" he asked. The man replied that he was. The newsboy hesitated a moment. Then he said: "Well, you look honest, anyway. I guess I'll trust you for the 2 cents."—Kansas City Times.

It is hoped that by next week the plans and specifications for the new Public Library will be ready for inspection by the public. There is no lethargy on the part of the Library Trustees regarding the building project and they are practically decided as to style of architecture. A well lighted and heated assembly room will undoubtedly be made of what would otherwise be a useless basement in the building, in which literary gatherings, social sessions and business meetings may be held. There is great need in Fulton for just such a room and it will enhance greatly the value of the library building to Fulton, if the proposed plan can be carried out.

BENEATH THE MISTLETOE.

The winter day is dull and gray;
The vagrant snowflake flies;
Within, the scene is gay and green
And bright as summer skies.
Lithe blazes wrap the mossy log
That sputters soft and low,
And blithely Love cooes like a dove
Beneath the mistletoe.

Beneath the mistletoe, Mary,
Beneath the mistletoe;
You make a bright Arabian night
Beneath the mistletoe.

Misshapen Care skulks in despair;
His shape nowhere is seen;
Joy leads apace the dance with grace
To music sharp and keen.
While faces bright, enwreathed in smiles,
About the fireside glow,

Time flies, mirth-stoled, on wings of gold
Beneath the mistletoe.
Beneath the mistletoe, Mary,
Beneath the mistletoe;
I wonder how I'll catch you now
Beneath the mistletoe.

New Christmas rhymes and Christmas chimes
Send forth their Christmas cheer,
While Christmas joys and Christmas toys
In merry hosts appear.
The earth is Love's own bower today,
With good will all aglow;
By Love's wing fanned, 'tis fairyland
Beneath the mistletoe.

Beneath the mistletoe, Mary,
Beneath the mistletoe;
Love's nest is here with you, my dear,
Beneath the mistletoe.

A Place to Stay When You Get There.

In planning a trip of any kind the wise traveler looks ahead to the end of his journey and finds out a good place to stop and what it will cost him per day or week.

The Passenger Department of the New York Central has just issued No. 36 of "The Four-Track Series," that wonderful series of little books so useful to the intending traveler.

No. 36 is entitled "The Winter Boarder," and gives a list of more than one thousand hotels and boarding houses in all parts of the country, giving the name and address of the proprietor, the number of people the house can accommodate, its rates per day and per week.

This booklet covers the country quite generally from New York to the Pacific coast, including the Adirondack Mountains, Canada, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, California, Washington and Oregon. It also includes the Hawaiian Islands.

"The Winter Boarder" will be found very useful by all who intend to go away for part of the Winter, and a copy will be sent free, postpaid, to any address on receipt of a two-cent stamp, by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, Grand Central station, New York.

THE SOCIALIST VOTE

GAIN OF THAT PARTY IN RECENT ELECTION CAUSE OF COMMENT.

Total Vote For Ticket Headed by Debs Over Half a Million—Seats In Legislature Captured by Socialists In Illinois and Wisconsin.

The Socialist party in 1900 cast less than 100,000 votes. The exact number is given as 97,730. Full returns have not yet been received for the election of 1904, but it is known that between 500,000 and 600,000 votes were cast for the Socialist candidates. The states of the middle west are the ones in which the Socialists made the largest gains. Illinois showed the most Socialistic strength, coming up to about 80,000 from about one-quarter that number four years ago. The city of Chicago alone gave the Debs and Hanford ticket over 42,000 votes.

Chicago sent two Socialists to the state legislature, J. A. Ambrose and Andrew Olson. They were elected from the stockyards district, and the dissatisfaction of the workingmen with the outcome of the big meat strike, in which victory was claimed by the employers, is held to account in part for the choice of the candidates of the Socialist party. In Wisconsin the Socialists not only rolled up a largely increased vote for their national ticket, but they elected five members of the state assembly and one state senator and came close to success on candidates for congress in the city of Milwaukee.

In one district of Milwaukee Winfield R. Gaylord, Socialist, obtained 9,517 votes as a candidate for congress as against 11,797 cast for the Democratic candidate and 16,116 for the Republican. In another district of Milwaukee Victor L. Berger, Socialist candidate for congress, did still better, receiving 9,981 votes as against 6,963 for his Democratic and 11,446 for his Republican opponent.

In Ohio the Socialist vote at the last election was about 30,000, or nearly five times what it was in 1900. In Kansas it has grown from 1,600 four years ago to 12,000, according to Socialist claims. The returns indicate a Socialist vote of about 40,000 in the state of New York as against 12,869 in 1900. In the state of New York the party has the official name of Social Democratic party, and the same name is used in Wisconsin. In some states there is a smaller Socialistic party known as the Socialist Labor party. The party which made the large gains in the recent election and which had as its candidates for president and vice president Eugene V. Debs and Benjamin Hanford is known nationally as the Socialist party. Local reasons are responsible for the use of the name Social Democratic in New York and Wisconsin.

Mr. Debs has been a champion of Socialistic ideas for some years, though until recently he was better known as a labor leader than as an exponent of these economic doctrines. He was born at Terre Haute, Ind., in 1855, was educated in the common schools and as a young man worked as a locomotive fireman. He was also in the grocery business and for four years was city clerk of Terre Haute. Becoming interested in organized labor, he rose to official position in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and became president of the American Railway union. He was nominated by the Socialists for president in 1900 and again chosen as their standard bearer this year. In speaking of the vote polled by the Socialist party Mr. Debs says:

"Two distinct and opposing tendencies are revealed in the recent election—one the overwhelming triumph of capitalistic interests, the other the advent of the working class in national politics, as shown by the enormous increase in the Socialist party's vote.

"The Democratic party as the representative of the middle class interests has been practically eliminated, and no sort of reorganization can save it from disintegration, for the simple reason that the middle class, upon which it is mainly built, is being wiped out of existence.

"The trust is doing its work in spite of the hue and cry against it. The next few years will see the climax of trustification, and it is this that will control the new political alignment, which will admit of no middle class party or halfway policy. The truth is that it is a fight between capital and labor, which the politicians of the capitalist parties have in the past been able to obscure and confuse, but the trusts are removing all doubt, and in the near future it must narrow down to that, and there can be no escape from it."

THE NEW YORK CENTRAL'S
NEW HIGH SPEED
97 TON ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVE

ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVE

For New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company.

The most powerful electric locomotive in the world has just been completed for the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad in the shops of the General Electric Company and the American Locomotive Works at Schenectady, N. Y.

This locomotive is one of between thirty and fifty which will be used by the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company for hauling the through passenger trains within its Electrical Zone from Grand Central Station through the Park Avenue tunnel to Croton on the Main Line, a distance of 34 miles, and to White Plains on the Harlem Division, a distance of 24 miles.

This will be the heaviest steam railway passenger service which has ever been handled by electric locomotives. With one of these locomotives trains of ten or more cars will be hauled at express speed of 60 to 70 miles per hour, and the design and method of control are such that two or more locomotives can be coupled together and operated by a single engineer from the leading cab, so that the size of the train that may be under the control of one engineer is practically unlimited so far as to the question of motive power.

In general design the locomotive is double ended and symmetrical in construction, so that it can be run in either direction with equal facility. The locomotive has four driving axles, and pony trucks at each end. Each driving axle carries without intermediate gearing the armature of an electric motor having a normal rating of 550 H. P., and capable of developing much greater power for short periods. This locomotive is, therefore, capable of developing greater horsepower than any steam locomotive.

The motors, aside from being the largest railway motors ever built, are of special interest owing to their particular design. In the ordinary railway motor the armature drives the car axle through spur gearing, but in these motors the armature is mounted directly upon the axle, thus dispensing with all gears and with all bearings, except the main journal bearings, which are outside the driving wheels, and the pony truck bearings.

The main frame of the locomotive is of cast steel, and is carried on elliptic springs, with the load equalized as in a steam locomotive. The main frame serves a double purpose, being not only the mechanical frame of the locomotive, but also the magnetic frame for the electric motors. Between the side frames are bolted heavy cast steel transoms with horizontal pole pieces, on which the field coils are placed. The motor has two poles, and the armature is free to play up and down between the vertical pole faces, which are approximately flat. This construction is strong and simple in design, and further insures reliability and a minimum of maintenance. The parts are also especially accessable for inspection and cleaning.

Mounted on the main frame is the steel cab in three divisions, in which are located the various devices for operating the locomotive. The locomotive is equipped for both straight and automatic air breaking, signaling devices, bell, whistle, headlights, air-sending device, electric air compressor, etc., being as complete in every way with respect to operating devices as a steam locomotive.

The Sprague-General Electric Multiple Unit Control is used, the motors being connected four in series; two groups of two in parallel series and all four in parallel. To facilitate running in either direction there are two master controllers, one at each end of the central cab, so located as to best enable the engineer to observe his track and signals. The contactors, reverser, resistances, etc., are located in the cab extensions on each end of the central cab.

There are four third-rail contact shoes in parallel on each side of the locomotive, and on top of the cab are also contact shoes for use in special places where an overhead conductor may be desirable.

For purpose of testing this locomotive, six miles of the New York Central track between Schenectady and Hoffmans has been equipped with a third rail. The track is practically straight and ballasted to permit maximum speeds of 70 to 80 miles per hour being attained.

The sub-station furnishing power for this track is located near the middle of the section, and contains one 1,500 K. W. rotary converter, with step-down transformers, switchboard, etc.

Adjoining the sub-station is a locomotive shed for housing the locomotive.

The power is obtained from a 2,000 K. W. Curtis turbine in the Power Station of the General Electric Company. This turbine is similar to the large 5,000 K. W. sets being installed in the New York Central two generating stations now under construction, and which will supply power to operate their electric service.

The power is transmitted at 11,000 volts; the transmission line extending along the Erie Canal to about opposite the sub-station, where it crosses the Mohawk River on high towers.

This power station, transmission line, sub-station equipment and the six miles of track is, undoubtedly, the most complete testing plant ever produced for trial of electric railroad motive power, and with the facilities afforded, in addition to testing the new locomotives, much interesting and valuable Electric Railroad information will unquestionably be obtained.

The following table gives briefly a number of items relating to the New York Central electric locomotive:

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

There is no one so hopeless as those who do not make mistakes.

No man can do anything against the grain. Woman can do it, but man can't.

A great deal of the friendship others have for you is like the come-any-time invitation.

A man can get sick now almost as easy as he can sin, and you all know how easy that is.

If a man can get into a bank after banking hours he considers himself a prominent citizen.

There is something fine in the bravery of a new father who carries a baby through the streets in his arms.

The first thing a girl does to a man after they are married is to get out his middle name, dust it off and use it as common as his first name.—Atchison Globe.

A Raise of a Hundred a Night.

A prominent actor told of a super who went to the manager of a successful play after it had been having a long metropolitan run and demanded a raise of salary.

"Sir," he said, "I have been playing my part for a hundred consecutive nights with the utmost zeal and care. Don't you think I should have a raise?"

"What part do you play?" asked the manager.

"I am in the third act, sir," replied the actor, apparently astonished at the question. "I have to stake $100 in the gambling scene."

"Your claim is just," replied the manager. "Beginning tonight you may stake $200."

RAISING FALL CALVES.

With Warm Quarters and Good Care Success Is Assured.

The better prices secured for dairy products in winter have influenced many progressive farmers to have quite a number of calves dropped in the fall of the year, says Farmers' Advocate.

To raise fall calves successfully it is necessary in the first place to provide warm quarters for them. A box stall where they can run loose after receiving their milk allowance both in the morning and evening is preferable to a stall in which they must be tied all the time. Some means for tying them while they are drinking their milk and eating their grain, however, should be provided in order to keep them from sucking each other, as this is an injurious habit.

Skim milk is the most economical food for calves, and since the advent of the hand separator this may be fed without any trouble whatsoever provided it is always fed at a certain uniform temperature very nearly that of freshly drawn milk. It is not necessary to feed whole milk to a calf longer than a week or ten days. After that time skim milk may gradually be substituted for whole milk until at the end of two weeks the calf is getting nothing but skim milk. As soon as this point has been reached add about a teaspoonful of ground flax (not flaxseed meal from which the oil has been extracted) to each feed. Flax, being rich in fat, supplies the fat removed from the milk by the separator, and as this fat has the same food value as has butter fat it is equally valuable as a calf food.

We have used the raw ground flax with excellent success for many years and know it to be an excellent food. A teaspoonful of flax meal at each feed is ample for a young calf, and more than a tablespoonful should never be fed even to large calves. When more grain is needed feed dry oats.

Working the Butter.

Great care should be taken to have butter a right temperature for working—usually between 50 and 55 degrees. There will then be a sufficient amount of moisture in the butter to dissolve the salt, and a reasonable amount of working—say twenty-two to twenty-four turns of the butter worker, or about thirty revolutions of a combined churn under average conditions [illegible] insure surplus and the [illegible] sufficient moisture, and all this [illegible] sacrificing the waxiness and [illegible] characteristic of good butter [illegible] ter should possess good keeping [illegible] ties.—J. A. Ruddick, Chief [illegible] vision, Ottawa Station.

GENERAL BLACK A FIGHTER.

The Next Pension Commissioner and His Civil War Record.

General John C. Black of Illinois, who is to succeed Eugene F. Ware as United States pension commissioner, has a fine war record and has been a dashing figure in public life. He is very popular in the Grand Army of the Republic and was recently commander in chief of the order. General Black was born in Mississippi in 1839, but his family removed to Illinois when he was a boy, and he was educated at Dansville, in that state, and at Wabash college, Crawfordsville, Ind. When the civil war broke out he enlisted in the Eleventh Indiana regiment, which was under command of General Lew Wallace. Afterward he was with the Thirty-seventh Illinois, rising to be a colonel. On the close of the war he was brevetted a brigadier general.

were on dress parade. He tore up and down the line, crying in clear tones to be accurate in the aim, to be careful and lie snug upon the ground. He saved the day at Prairie Grove."

After the war General Black read law and took up the practice of that profession. In 1885 President Cleveland appointed him pension commissioner, and he served until 1889. He has since been a congressman at large from Illinois and United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois. President Roosevelt appointed him as the Democratic member of the civil service commission, which position he now holds.

FROM POVERTY TO WEALTH.

Romantic Rise of the Young Woman Who Is Now Mrs. W. A. Clark.

As mistress of the palatial residence of Senator William A. Clark on Fifth avenue, New York, the young and beautiful wife of the Montana copper king will be surrounded with every luxury and with treasures of art from every quarter of the world. Yet a half dozen years ago she was a poor girl in Butte, Mont. As Miss Ada La Chappelle, daughter of a widow who was struggling to provide for her family, she could not have dreamed that in so short a time she would be the hostess of a $2,000,000 mansion.

Mrs. Clark was sent abroad to study music and languages by Senator Clark while she was his ward. He fell in love with her and made her his wife about three years ago.

MASCULINE VANITY.

Men Who Stop to Admire Themselves In Show Windows.

"Speaking of the trifling affairs of life," said a clerk in one of the big stores, "I'm not so sure that men are so much when you come to compare them with women, although they pretend to rise superior on occasions. I've a notion that human nature is about the same in both sexes, after all, and it crops up in some way. You know there's a theory that a woman couldn't pass a mirror without giving a glance at herself if she were on her way to rescue her only child from a burning accident.

"It may not always be vanity, of course. Perhaps it's force of habit. Well, you'd be surprised at the number of men who have that same habit. I'm here at a counter in front, where I can see some things, and it's better than a poor play to watch the faces at that big show window. They are men's faces I'm talking about. The light strikes that window so that it makes a pretty good looking glass of it, and I'm truthful when I tell you that it holds up as many hes as it does shes in the course of a day. The only difference is that the woman makes no bones of what she's doing. She'll give a twirl to her front hair and a pull to her veil and make sure that her hat and nose are on straight, and she doesn't care whether passersby are on to her game or not. But the man plays off. He wants you to suppose that it's the display of goods that's caught him. Yes, it is, I guess not. He's wrapped up in velvets at $1 a yard and in silks cheap at 76 cents, he is. You can tell from where I stand that he doesn't see a thing that's in that window except his own beautiful reflection. He'll study the effect of his scarf and his gloves, and then he'll look lower down, where there are no goods, and step out a little to get the cut of his trousers and shoes. And very often he'll put on that 'look pleasant' expression the photographer asks you to wear that makes a driveling idiot of you in the picture. There is no great harm in it provided the men are in no great hurry and have nothing better to do, but when I hear them ... mirrors in connection ... I have to smile to myself."—Providence Journal.

Butter and Cheese

On account of the demand for print butter the manufacturers and dealers in dairy supplies have designed a number of machines and appliances for economically molding the butter into print forms, says American Cultivator. A similar arrangement for molding cheese so that it may be cut into one pound prints has been designed at the Wisconsin station. The first print cheese was made during the winter of 1898-99. The cheese is made by the usual cheddar process, but the curd is placed in a rectangular mold, the bottom, or "follower," of which is a carved board. This board makes an impression in each one pound print of cheese, the groove showing where it should be cut in order to make each print about one pound in weight. Each cheese shown weighs a little over fifteen pounds.

Removing the Buttermilk.

When churning small lots of cream some persons squeeze out the buttermilk by the aid of a wooden roller or spoon, but this method requires an excessive manipulation, which injures the texture of the butter. It is preferable to remove the buttermilk by means of water, and the washing should take place while the butter is still in the churn and as soon as the greater part of the buttermilk has been drawn off. Butter that is to be eaten quickly need not be so thoroughly washed as that which is required to be kept for some time, as a small quantity of buttermilk left therein brings out the aroma more quickly.

Cottonseed Butter.

Southern dairymen should remember that they cannot make a first class article of butter by feeding cotton seed alone. It spoils the flavor. Cottonseed meal, or well steamed cotton seeds, fed in limited quantities in connection with other feed will do no harm.—Farm Visitors.

Salting the Butter.

One ounce of salt to a pound of butter is usually the best rule, but always try to salt to suit your customers.

Churning the Cream.

For churning we prefer a simple, revolving barrel or box with no inside fixings. Stop the churn when the butter granules are the size of half a grain of wheat. If you get the granules too large you will have trouble to drain out the buttermilk and incorporate the salt. If the temperature is low enough to make the granules rather hard the buttermilk will drain out more completely. Should we have trouble to get the butter to float a little the water with a few handfuls of salt will bring the butter on top.—L. W. Lighty at Pennsylvania Farm Institute Meeting.

THE COUNTY BOARD

Of Supervisors in Annual Session—Resume of Each Day's Proceedings Prepared for the Readers of The Fulton Patriot.

Dec. 7th—During the meeting of the Board of Supervisors Wednesday morning a handsome oil painting of the late Orville Robinson surrounded by a heavy gold frame, was presented to the county by his son, Wardwell G. Robinson, one of the city's best known citizens. The presentation speech was made by David P. Morehouse who paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of one of the former residents of Oswego county.

On motion of Supervisor Glynn of the Third ward the portrait was accepted in behalf of the county and as Mr. Robinson was at one time Surrogate, it will be hung in the Surrogate's office.

Attorney D. P. Morehouse, in the course of his speech of presentation, gave the following sketch of the late Mr. Robinson:

He came to the village of Mexico soon after he had reached his majority, in the year 1827, when this county was in large part a wilderness, and he lived here for over half a century. His life was an active, useful one, as lawyer and business man and as a public servant. As a lawyer, as I have been told by his contemporaries, he was a clear, strong reasoner, and in that great court—the trial court—before a jury, he was one of the most eloquent men the county has ever known. He filled at different times the offices of town clerk, justice of the peace, supervisor, surrogate, member of assembly, recorder of the city of Oswego, collector of the port, and member of congress. He went to congress at about the time of the coming of the practical application of electricity, and he formed a part of that historic scene witnessed in a room at the capitol, when Morse received the first telegraph messages over the experimental line from Baltimore to Washington.

In the fourth year in the legislature he was elected to the responsible office of speaker of the assembly. He filled all of these offices with credit to himself and his county.

From this brief summary it will be seen that Orville Robinson was one of [illegible] should adorn the walls of our beautiful county building.

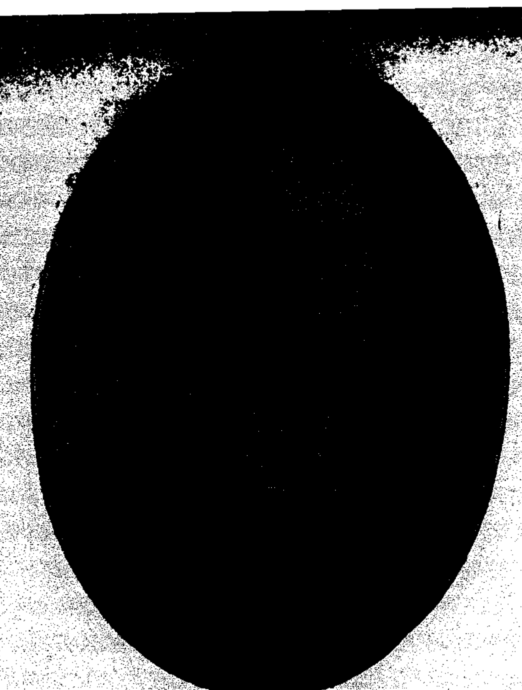
HARRY L. WAUGH,
Elected Chief of the Paid Fire Department.



HON. CHARLES L. KNAPP,
Member of Congress, Twenty-Eighth District.

Fulton's New Post Office Building.

On Thursday last Hon. Charles L. Knapp, our popular and efficient member of congress from this district, introduced in the House a bill, calling for an appropriation of $75,000 for the erection of a public building in Fulton.

The move is a start towards giving Fulton a building for the post office. The business transacted at this office every year is steadily increasing. The present quarters are too small. There is no rentable building any larger available and the Chamber of Commerce have requested Congressman Knapp to aid us in securing a suitable building.

That Congressman Knapp is ever attentive to the wants of the people of his district, is shown by the introduction of the bill—the first step of importance in regard to the new structure for the Fulton post office. That he will push the bill forward as rapidly as possible, is assured beyond a doubt.

MR. H. C. GIESLER

GIVES REASONS WHY HE CONSIDERS VINOL

The Greatest Health Restorer and Strength Creator Known to Medicine.

First: Because Vinol contains in a concentrated form all of the medicinal curative elements actually taken from fresh cods' livers, but without a drop of oil to nauseate and upset the stomach and retard its work; therefore, wherever old-fashioned cod liver oil or emulsions will do good, Vinol will do far more good.

Second: Because Vinol acts upon the stomach, creates a healthy appetite, strengthens and tones up the digestive organs; purifies and enriches the blood, and in a natural manner health is restored and strength created.

Third: Because Vinol contains no injurious drugs to react upon the system; you know just what you are taking, as it is printed on every bottle.

Fourth: Because we have never sold anything in our store equal to Vinol to restore health and create strength for old people, weak, sickly women and children, nursing mothers, and to build up the system after a severe sickness.

Vinol cures hacking coughs, chronic colds, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles.

A prominent physician writes: "Vinol is the most palatable and valuably preparation of cod liver oil ever compounded. I now use it in all cases where I formerly depended upon old-fashioned cod liver oil and emulsions."

"Try Vinol on our guarantee to return money if you receive no benefit. H. C. Giesler, Druggist.

According to a report received at the St. Paul office of the New York Central Lines, a messenger boy was sent a trip of 1,960 miles during the recent storm in the east. He reached New York Tuesday morning, giving the New York member of the firm its Chicago orders before the market opened that morning. He left the same afternoon for Chicago with a report of the securities purchased.—From the Minneapolis Journal, Nov. 23, 1904.

Sick Blood

Feed pale girls on Scott's Emulsion.

We do not need to give all the reasons why Scott's Emulsion restores the strength and flesh and color of good health to those who suffer from sick blood.

The fact that it is the best preparation of Cod Liver Oil, rich in nutrition, full of healthy stimulation is a suggestion as to why it does what it does.

Scott's Emulsion presents Cod Liver Oil at its best, fullest in strength, least in taste.

Young women in their "teens" are permanently cured of the peculiar disease of the blood which shows itself in paleness, weakness and nervousness, by regular treatment with Scott's Emulsion.

It is a true blood food and is naturally adapted to the cure of the blood sickness from which so many young women suffer.

We will be glad to send a sample to any sufferer.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

An Epicure In Condiment.

It was in the dining room of a country hotel, the Chicago Record-Herald says, and the brisk waitress held a glass pitcher above some steaming buckwheat cakes she had placed before the guest from town.

"Sir'p?" she asked.

"If you please."

"Will you have it raound and raound or in a puddle?"

"Beg pardon?"

"Raound and raound or in a puddle?"

"I—I—in a puddle, I think."

The golden stream began its sticky descent on the center of the cakes, and as she poured the waitress included the guest and her work in one friendly contemplative glance.

"Some prefers it raound and raound, but I like it best in a puddle myself," she said graciously, as she shut off the stream of sirup with a dexterous turn of her wrist.

A Nest of Criminals.

A spot practically unknown to civilization on the shores of the Red sea at Midi is the home of pirates and slavers, a regular nest of criminals. The place is inhabited almost entirely by men, for the sheik who holds absolute control there allows only the best of his warriors to marry. It pays no tribute to the Turkish government, for it lies at the end of a long, narrow harbor inaccessible to vessels. It seems probable that it will continue its career unchecked.

$1.25 for You in Every Ton.

There are various ways in which to save money, but we know of no surer, no easier way than by burning genuine gas coke—figure it yourself—coal costs $6.25, coke costs $5.00; quite a difference, a difference of $1.25 per ton.

Dustless, clinkerless, burns with a much more intense heat than coal—so much to be said in favor of coke.

Opening of "The Comet."

Tuesday evening of last week, Timothy Reynolds, who recently purchased the business of P. J. Bolger at 28 East First street, and who has been renovating and refurnishing the place with up-to-date furniture and fittings, formally opened his place, and the responses to the invitations sent out were numerous.

A full orchestra was stationed in the lunch room and furnished up-to-date music during the evening.

The billard room in the basement was transformed into a dining room, where an elaborate buffet luncheon served to the guests during the evening.

Mr. Reynolds has refitted his establishment in a first-class manner; he has stocked his bar with the best grades of wines, liquors, beer and ales, while his brands of cigars are equal to any in the city.

On the first floor he has his regular saloon, with handsome bar and sideboard. In the rear is a well appointed lunch room with chairs and tables, while in the basement, he has a well arranged billiard and pool room.

Mr. Reynolds says it is his purpose to conduct a first-class establishment, furnish his patrons with the best goods to be obtained and at moderate prices, and preserve the best of order at all times.

The enterprising proprietor is popular with all classes and he starts his new establishment under the most promising auspices.

Plans for Carnagie Library.

The proposed plans for the new Carnagie Library building are ready for inspection at the Public library and all who are interested are invited to call and see them. All details will be arranged this Winter, and as early as the weather will permit in the Spring, work will be commenced. Fifty per cent. of the subscriptions are being called in, and the subscribers are requested to pay the money to Attorney Arvin Rice as soon as possible. Prof. F. W. Revels and Mr. E. Hollenbeck of Syracuse are the architects who have drawn up the submitted plans for the Library, and as they have more than a passing interest in Fulton, they will expend their very best effort on the suiting of the plans to the location and the amount to be expended in construction. The assembly room in the first floor is an exceedingly happy arrangement and one which will be more appreciated as time passes. The Library trustees would be grateful for suggestions as to the plans for the proposed Library. Pressed brick will be used for the building and as soon as the trustees have accepted plans for the Library, the letting of the contracts will be in order.

W. J. Pentelow Reaches His Winter Residence in Southern California—Marvellous Growth of Plants—Good Season for Fruit.

Mr. W. J. Pentelow, who is spending the Winter months in Corona, Cal., where he has had a beautiful home erected, writes a friend in this city to this effect:

Our journey here was uneventful with only the usual routine of travel, some hinderance by freight blockade at Las Vegas, and for many miles this side, the track had been washed out completely, even carrying heavy iron sections of the bridge a quarter of a mile from the main track and destroying thousand of dollars of property. A strange feature is that at Needles, the first town you strike in California after crossing the Colorado River, the dividing line between California and Arizona, they claim there has been no rain in twelve years, and it is only fifteen miles from the scene of this vast destruction. An immense amount of damage by floods has occurred within the past six weeks, several cloudbursts following, one after another, at Ashfork in Arizona, where we stopped 30 minutes for dinner. Among the delicacies served were choice ripe strawberries, the first we had met with. The same conditions occurred at Needles, where we took supper. All the meals during our journey were served in fine style and partaken of with much zest. A good night's sleep brought us to San Barnidino at 5:40 Thursday morning. A freight blockade delayed us until 8 a. m., where our train for Corona was waiting for us, and we bade good bye to our travelling companions, Mrs. Warner, her two sons and Miss Townsend, who continued their journey to Los Angeles, being in good health and spirits, anxious to reach their destination.

We were met at the station by Mr. Mate Terpening and [illegible] house but a short distance from our own house.

We found the house as we left it except the six months' accumulation of dust, which is no small job to clean up, more especially on the large porches. A few of the shrubs died, but the great majority lived and have done well. I think I never saw such rapid growth before; little shrubs only eighteen or twenty inches high when I set them out last Spring, are now six and eight feet high. Last April I had fifty orange trees budded and now, only six months growth, there are some of them two inches in diameter and will blossom this Spring. Just think of it, one year from time of budding and blossoming and bearing fruit. I am more than surprised at the wonderful growth.

Wife and I are busy cleaning and getting the new house ready for our goods when they arrive. I think now, will take a team in the morning and drive to Riverside. Want to get a lot of trees and shrubs and some things for the house, so will take a drive tomorrow. The weather is just lovely, of course. I had on a heavy suit of clothes the next morning after our arrival. I went down town and when I came back I immediately changed my clothes, putting on the lightest suit I had last Summer and a neglige shirt. The thermometer registered yesterday and today 85 degrees, and on our front porch, off our bed room, 185, I judge. The evenings are cool, so that you sleep well. Every night I sleep with the window sash clear up to the top and the outside door, opening on to the porch, wide open all night, so you see we have lots of ozone.

The prospects seem good for good prices for fruit this year. They are picking all that will bear picking at this time and shipping them East. One man showed me yesterday his check and bill for a carload which averaged $1.75 per box, which last year the same lot only brought him 50 cents per box. The growers are looking forward to a better year this year and are quite hopeful for better prices. The oranges picked now are not fit for a York State hog to eat and I doubt if they would touch them.

COMMON COUNCIL.

Equitable Settlement of Cases Against City—Issue of $30,000 Bonds for Sewers Authorized—Adoption of Budget.

At a meeting of the Common Council, held on Thursday evening, Dec. 15, it was decided to ratify the agreement entered into between City Attorney S. B. Mead and the following, in settlement of claims for alleged injuries sustained: John J. Shannon, Marshall M. and William Poucher, the amounts being respectively $2,600, $700 and $800 with interest.

On Friday evening, on resolution offered by Alderman Dilts, it was decided to issue $30,000 in bonds of $1,000 each, for the building of sewers on the west side. The bonds will bear date of Jan. 1, 1905, and will carry 4 per cent. interest. These will be made payable at the office of the United States Mortgage and Trust Company of New York.

City Attorney Mead was instructed to secure the approval of J. H. Caldwell of New York regarding the legality of the sewer bonds, the expense, which would include the cost of printing, engraving and advertising, not to exceed $300.

A claim amounting to $1,825.14, from the Fulton Light, Heat & Power Company, for lighting streets of city during months of October and November was approved by the council.

Alderman Russell also moved that the City Chamberlain be authorized to borrow $6,900.44 to pay the claims recently settled and approved by the Council. The motion was carried as was also a resolution ordering the payment of a bill from the City Attorney in the amount of $112.17, the bill having been audited by the finance committee.

The budget for 1905, as drawn up by the Council, was adopted, on resolution of Alderman Russell. This is to include such an amount as shall be certified by the Board of Supervisors as the city's share of the county taxes.

PUBLIC BUILDING

Measure Introduced in Congress by Representative Knapp Asking for $85,000 Appropriation for Building in Fulton.

This Congressional district is fortunate in having a representative at Washington who is ever ready and anxious to loyally serve his constituents.

It was generally understood that when the necessity for a public building in this city became great—when the exigency arose—and the Chamber of Commerce took the initiative, Congressman Knapp would prove equal to the occasion, and in conformity with such expressed desire, would introduce a bill in Congress which would ultimately obtain the relief asked for.

Ample evidence of such a bill having been introduced is furnished by the following dispatch:

Washington, D. C., Dec. 14, 1904.
The Fulton Times, Fulton, N. Y.:
Have introduced bill for public building in Fulton, asking appropriation of $85,000. CHARLES L. KNAPP.

The prompt attention given this important matter by Congressman Knapp is indeed commendable.

Since the introduction of the bill, Postmaster Youmans has received diligent inquiry from the Treasury Department regarding the probable cost of an eligible site, floor space required, population of city last census, etc., all of which is in considerable detail, and will be fully and accurately answered in due time.

It [illegible] report the result to the [illegible] partment at an early date.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 21, 1904.

THE South, in anticipation of the President's visit in May, is already warming towards him in a very agreeable manner.

A PURE drug law is badly needed in Chicago, as well as other places. Out of 139 prescriptions recently filled in that city by as many druggists, only 31 were made of pure material. Manufacturers are to blame quite as much as the druggists, and the doctors and the sick are the victims.

THERE is at least one Englishman Sir Alfred Mosely, who after an exhaustive study of conditions in this country, does not hesitate to say that the prosperity of the United States is wonderful. Her progress, he adds, will be steadily and rapidly upward, and he predicts that during the next generation the commercial and idealistic achievements of America may fairly stagger humanity. All this is largely owing to a free Republican form of government supplimented by a scientific and practical system of education. Give the people a square deal and an equal opportunity, and progress will take care of itself.

THE Union League Club of New York City is known as the home of protectionists; naturally it takes an interest in the agitation of tariff reform. A few days since it passed a resolution asking Congress to authorize a competent investigation so that it may be determined whether there are inequalities or injustices in the present tariff schedules. In any case this would have to be done before Congress could intelligently rectify them. Those who desire tariff reform cannot begin too soon to collect data in favor of their contention. And when compiled it can be prompty presented to the Congressional committee.

EX-AMBASSADOR A. D. WHITE agrees with President Roosevelt in deploring the law's delay, especially in criminal cases. He says crime is crime, and it is somebody's duty to make its prosecution more speedy and less intricate. Even the Government, when prosecutor, as in the case of Beavers, Machen, Groff, and many others, finds it impossible to expedite the trial and secure the prompt carrying out of the sentence. Mr. White says that in regard to this matter he prefers evolution to revolution. It is acknowledged that high crime is more frequent in this country than anywhere else in the world, save only Sicily. Since we are in the habit of calling down other people who commit crimes, this is a serious indictment for a nation which prides itself upon its intelligence and christianity.

NOTHING indicates better the growth and popularity of free institutions, under wise Republican administration of the government, than the enormous increase in schools and colleges during the last decade, and the great influx of pupils of both sexes, all anxious to secure the best possible education. Within ten years in Pennsylvania the attendance at colleges has doubled; standards have been raised and courses of studies lengthened; the number of high schools has risen from 122 to 630; the normal schools have been filled to overflowing, and in many instances palatial structures have taken place of old fashioned school houses. The State now has in its schools 1,200,230 pupils, who are instructed by 32,225 teachers. What is true of the progress of education in the Keystone State is largely true of all other States.

LAST week's panic in Wall street, which in three days reduced the value of sixteen leading stocks $213,411,576, was not in the remotest degree the result of recommendations in the President's message, or the proposed policy of the Republican party. Neither can it be laid wholly at the door of Mr. Lawson, although he contributed his influence. The market was weak because it had become "stale," that is stocks had been forced up to their full measure of value, and a reaction was sure to follow. When the toppling began the usual financial cyclone was witnessed in the stock exchange. But as the business, banking and manufacturing conditions of the country are sound, backed by tremendous crops and vast orders for manufactured articles, the stock market will soon find its normal level, and the shorn lambs can once more gamble and feed in May-green pastures.

NOT many years ago bank robbing was a successful occupation for crooks and thieves. This is now comparatively rare owing to the improved methods of constructing bank buildings and the use of burglar proof safes and vaults. Post offices have taken the place of the old time banks and present a wide and easy field for the burglar. During the last fiscal year no less than 1593 post offices in this country were robbed, or at the rate of four for each day! In addition to these crimes, 940 street and rural free delivery boxes were rifled of their contents. Exactly how to account for this increase in crime may be difficult, but it is plain that post offices are not protected as they should be. Since the post office is a government institution, destined to exist as long as the government itself, why not begin to make it permanent, safe and secure from burglars.

THE romantic farce of Mrs. Chadwick came to the press just in time to head off the tragedy and sin of Nan Patterson, which was deluging the land with unsavory details. "Laugh and the world laughs with you," and Mrs. Chadwick is now having her innings? How long she must have been laughing up her sleeve at the scheme she devised for getting other people's money without committing an indictable offence, only she knows, and she declines to take the public into her confidence. Silence with her is golden—so golden that is expected she must have settled some two or three millions of dollars upon her husband, who is doing Europe, and telegraphing home that he stands by his wife! What with fashionable gowns, automobiles, costly entertainments, and all the rest of the outside show of wealth and respectability, she cut a wide swarth in her Cleveland circle of society. It was very fine while it lasted. She danced but others paid the fiddler. There is a hazard in new friends, as Ira Reynolds has discovered. "Money talks" and with plenty of it there is little difficulty in sailing with the 400.

"DeWitt's is the only Witch Hazel Salve" writes J. L. Tucker of Centre, Ala. "I have used it in my family for piles, cuts, and burns for years and can recommend it to be the best salve on the market. Every family should keep it, as it is an invaluable household remedy, and should always be kept on hand for immediate use" Mrs. Samuel Gage of North Bush, N. Y. says. "I had a fever sore on my ankle for twelve years that the doctors could not cure. All salve's and blood remedies proved worthless. I could not walk for over two years. Finally I was persuaded to try DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, which has completely cured me. It is a wonderful relief." DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures without leaving a scar. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Overcoat Satisfaction

If you have always had your overcoat made to measure, you will give your prejudice against ready-to-wear apparel a severe shock by dropping in here and seeing the swellest overcoats in town, at prices that will not only please but surprise you. We sell the

and there is just as much style, just as much quality, just as good fit, as you would get from the "merchant tailor," and at a price far below the amount he has been charging you.

Here are two of the most popular styles in long coats. They both possess that quality of Schloss "drapery" that is giving other clothing manufacturers much concern. In simple language they "hang right," and the way they hang makes them distinctive in style. The "swagger" is correct, the materials perfect. If you want to get away from the ordinary, buy a Schloss Overclad.

DEEP SEA CURRENTS

THE GULF STREAM AND ITS COURSE THROUGH THE OCEAN.

Many Irregularities Are Known to Occur In Both the Direction and In the Velocity of This Peculiar River of the Atlantic.

Seamen sometimes seem to forget that even the most permanent of ocean currents are occasionally driven out of their usual track by a succession of strong winds from one direction, and the fairy tales with respect to the alleged vagaries of the gulf stream told so frequently only tend to show that navigators rather too frequently regard that river in the ocean as not less firmly fixed in velocity and direction than if it were flowing to the sea between banks formed by the solid earth of our planet. As a matter of fact, ever since the gulf stream was first discovered about four centuries ago it was recognized by thoughtful navigators that fixity of tenure did not and could not hold for that vast body of relatively warm water cushioned off from the Atlantic coast of America by the colder waters of the Labrador current even as far toward the equator as Florida. Were it not for the gulf stream, or, more accurately, the eastern extension thereof, the average air temperature in the winter would be not less than 29 degrees below the freezing point of water on a Fahrenheit thermometer registered at the Shetland islands. As matters stand the presence of the relatively cold current from the Arctic washing our shores, inside of the warmer gulf stream, closes up the harbors of Newfoundland at the same time as the gulf stream extension is keeping the Norwegian coast clear of ice even as far to the northward as the North cape. To put it another way, St. John's, N. F., is sometimes closed with ice even as late in the year as June, while Liverpool, which is 2 degrees farther to the north, has never been in that condition since the glacial epoch.

In fact, it has been seriously suggested that by diverting the course of the gulf stream into the Pacific, through the narrow neck of land joining the two Americas, it would be quite possible to freeze out a considerable portion of Europe. The cool Labrador current setting southward from the icy regions adjacent to the north pole impinges with greater velocity than usual upon the northern margin of the gulf stream in certain years. Cyclonic storms traveling up from the southward deflect it also, and consequently the gulf stream, although probably the most permanent of all the great ocean currents, is not invariable either in velocity or in direction. Generally speaking, this ocean river in the lower latitudes of the Atlantic is driven westward by the prevailing easterly winds acting upon the sea surface until the western side of the gulf of Mexico is attained. Thence it follows the land till an outlet is found through the strait of Florida, which, being both narrow and shallow, causes the velocity of the current to increase. Thence it sweeps northeastward outside of the Labrador cool current hugging the coast until the banks of Newfoundland are reached. About there the gulf stream proper is said to lose its identity as such, but the warm waters thereof are driven by the prevailing westerly winds toward the United Kingdom, Norway and even Spitzbergen. Many irregularities are known to occur in both the direction and the velocity of the gulf stream from time to time, consequent on wind changes and variations in barometric pressure.

Prior to the age of chronometers most extravagant views were put forward by navigators and others in a hurry to the effect that by the aid of an ordinary thermometer the longitude could be accurately determined if the shipmaster would but trouble to take a series of sea surface temperatures when in the vicinity of the gulf stream. Similarly the sea surface temperature was regarded in about the same geographical position as an infallible guide to the proximity of ice. Neither inference is true. High temperature indicates tropical origin and low temperature indicates polar origin generally speaking, but beyond this it is dangerous to predicate. The relatively warm water may be in a very abnormal position for the period of the year owing to natural causes, and a fall of 25 degress Fahrenheit is sometimes experienced in a short ship's length on the mingling places of the warm gulf stream and cold Labrador current on a beautifully clear day without the slightest sign of ice of any kind above the boundary line of sea and sky. Many a sailing ship, after vainly trying to reach New York, has got badly iced up and run to the warmer waters of the gulf stream to thaw out both her crew and her gear, but neither the longitude nor the presence of ice can be rightly determined solely by the aid of sea surface temperatures. Neverthelecs the use of the sea surface thermometer is not to be despised, because it is undoubtedly of approximate assistance in defining a ship's geographical position. The line of separation of the two currents, the cool Labrador and the warm gulf stream, is often noticeable either by the vivid blue of the salter gulf stream in close proximity to the green color of the fresher Labrador current or by the ripple on the margin. It is said that a blockade runner from Wilmington, N. C., when chased by a Federal cruiser, managed to escape by the observation of this friendly ripple. The blockade runner edged into the current more favorable for her, while the cruiser kept in the adverse current and lost the prize.—American Syren and Shipping.

A Blind Man's Blunder.

A blind man named Green made a curious defense at Birmingham, England, to a charge of smashing a plate glass window worth £15. He had been blind, he said, for seven years. On the night in question he cried for assistance to cross the road, but no one came. Then he heard some one at a distance and struck at what used, when he could see, to be boards surrounding waste ground. He was astounded when he heard the sound of broken glass. The jury acquitted him, and he was discharged.

People Who Are In the Public Eye

MRS. HETTY GREEN, who, with the possible exception of Senora Isidora Cousino of Chile, is the richest woman in the world, is supposed to be possessed of at least $55,000,000. Senora Cousino is credited with $70,000,000. Mrs. Green looks after her own affairs and is shrewdness itself. When she married Edward Henry Green he was a rich man, but she insisted before the wedding that each should be absolved from any responsibility for the indebtedness of the other and that the property of each should be kept separate. Despite the entreaties of his brainy wife, Mr. Green speculated in Wall street and lost all his money. He then retired from active life and spent his last days in obscurity. His wife has continued to increase her fortune. Like Russell Sage, she is of a frugal disposition and lives very plainly. She has a permit to carry a revolver, and the weapon usually reposes in a reticule in company with millions of dollars' worth of securities. Mrs. Green and the reticule are inseparable.

MRS. HETTY GREEN.

"A pistol is a good thing to have around when I am talking to lawyers," she said recently. "Now, if you were a lawyer and I had a pistol lying on the table and I took the pistol up in my hands, you would keep away, wouldn't you? You wouldn't try to bulldoze me because I am a woman. Except for lawyers I am happy. People are good to me. I have a good conscience. I eat well and am in splendid health. But you don't know what these lawyers have done to me. I am going to protect myself. I am not bloodthirsty, for I am a Quakeress, but if I had to shoot I believe I could hit a man at twenty yards. I wouldn't shoot to hit him first; I would shoot over his head to scare him."

M. Theophile Delcasse, the French minister of foreign affairs, whose prestige has been strengthened so much recently by his success in bringing about the Anglo-French agreement, has another feather in his cap as a diplomat. This consists in the fact that his influence is credited with averting the threatened clash between England and Russia over the North sea incident. France did not want to be drawn into any struggle because of her alliance with Russia, and the course of events has added to the popularity of M. Delcasse.

The foreign minister had a good laugh a few weeks ago when he read in a French paper this description of himself: "Frog eyes, the ears of a bat, the vaulted forehead of a hydrocephalus, a small retrousse nose, wide open at the bottom, the goatee of a sea lion." M. Delcasse can now afford to be good humored when he sees such pen sketches of himself. He is not an Apollo, but the description quoted somewhat exaggerates his homeliness, and his achievements more than offset the defects in his features and figure. His father was a humble peasant, and the present diplomat began life as a newspaper writer. Becoming the secretary to a member of the chamber of deputies, it chanced that the deputy died. M. Delcasse soon married his widow and succeeded to the seat as a deputy occupied by his former employer. He has been a cabinet officer under four successive administrations, so that it begins to be said that though ministries may come and ministries may go Delcasse stays on forever.

M. DELCASSE.

Russell Sage, whose wealth is estimated at over $25,000,000, is still in the business harness at the age of eighty-eight. When he was a boy he adopted as his motto the old adage, "Any one can earn a dollar, but it takes a wise man to keep it." He saved the first dollar he made and never has been in debt since, he says. Though so many times a millionaire, he is still haunted now and then by the dread of poverty, which he acquired in early youth from seeing the misery caused by it.

Mr. Sage has been financially interested in railroads since 1850, a time when the railroad business was in its infancy. He is the only director now alive of the original board of directors of the New York Central road. It is an old saying in Wall street that Russell Sage belongs to the Hundred Year club. To be sure, he has not reached that age yet, but he is in a fair way to do so. At eighty-eight he is active and attends closely to business, and every time a birthday comes around he says he is going to celebrate many more. He proposes to die in the company of his old friend the "ticker" when his [illegible]. His mother passed away [illegible] as she was sitting in her rocking chair knitting stockings. His grandmother died at the age of [illegible] work up to the day of her demise.

RUSSELL SAGE.

Mr. Sage has never been known as a president maker, but he figured at one time in that role, and it was nearly sixty years ago too. He was chairman of the New York state delegation at the Whig convention which nominated Zachary Taylor for president. Sage and his associates were Henry Clay men and voted solidly for "the Mill Boy of the Slashes," but when it became apparent he could not be nominated they threw their votes, under the lead of Sage, to General Taylor. The latter's friends were so well pleased that they told Sage he could name the candidate for vice president. The name of a lawyer in Buffalo, Millard Fillmore, occurred to him. His suggestion was taken, and thus Fillmore came not long after to live at the White House as president.

Elihu Root, former secretary of war, like Joseph H. Choate, another famous New York lawyer, is a wit. When Secretary William H. Taft, who weighs 320 pounds, was civil governor of the Philippines, his health was sadly undermined. He was laboring under great responsibility in governing the archipelago, where conditions were yet so disturbed as to give Secretary Root and President Roosevelt much concern. Mr. Root therefore requested Judge Taft to keep him advised by the new Pacific cable as to the state of his health. One day, says the New York Herald, this message came to Mr. Root from Governor Taft at Benguet, in the mountains near Manila:

ELIHU ROOT.

Rode ten miles on a mule today. Am feeling much better. TAFT.

Mr. Root chuckled and doubled with mirth in the chair which Secretary Taft has since discarded as too small. He dictated this reply:

Taft, Benguet—Glad to hear it, but how is the mule? ROOT.

Carroll D. Wright, who is about to terminate his long connection with the bureau of labor statistics at Washington, is one of the foremost statistical authorities of the time. It was he who originated the saying, "Figures do not lie, but liars figure." He was the first labor commissioner of the United States and was appointed to that position by President Cleveland in 1885. When the bureau of labor statistics became a part of the department of commerce and labor he remained as head of the bureau, and thus has served under Cleveland, Harrison, McKinley and Roosevelt. He rendered distinguished service in the settlement of the anthracite coal strike as a member of the commission appointed by President Roosevelt to arbitrate the difficulty, is president of one college and holds positions as professor and lecturer in three other educational institutions. His resignation of his position as head of the bureau of labor statistics is due to his desire to give more time to his work as president of the collegiate department of Clark university, Worcester, Mass., and to important literary work.

CARROLL D. WRIGHT.

Mr. Wright was twenty-one years of age and was reading law in his native state of New Hampshire when the civil war broke out. In 1862 he went to the front as a second lieutenant and rose to the rank of colonel. During the war his regiment was on duty for some time in Washington, and he was officer of the day in that city on July 4, 1863, during the progress of the battle of Gettysburg. At this time he received a telegram asking for an ambulance to carry the gallant General Sickles, who had lost his leg in the battle, to a hospital in Washington.

Though a statistician, Colonel Wright is something of a wit. A Democratic friend who was pleased with Commissioner Wright's attitude on labor questions once said to him, "If you were a Democrat I would like to see you in the presidential chair at this time."

"I appreciate your compliment very much," the labor commissioner is said to have replied, "but with all respect to your great party I would rather be Wright than president."

Attorney General William H. Moody, who has decided to remain in President Roosevelt's cabinet, was secretary of the navy prior to the retirement of former Attorney General Philander C. Knox. In Haverhill, Mass., Mr. Moody's home town, there is an informal association of gentlemen whose object is the very definite pursuance of any old scheme which involves a good time. When the press dispatches announced Mr. Moody's appointment to the navy portfolio the members of the association drew up a telegram as follows:

"Dear Bill—We're glad you've got the job. Please send up the Dolphin. The gang wants to go fishing."

ATTORNEY GENERAL MOODY.

Mr. Moody read law with Richard H. Dana, author of "Two Years Before the Mast," and was admitted to the bar without having studied the prescribed time. "Much as we desired to exclude you," said the chairman of the examining board, "we are compelled to admit you." When Mr. Moody was a senior at Harvard a young freshman appeared at the college, and little did Moody imagine that the humble "freshie" would one day be president of the United States and that he, a mighty senior, would be "Freshie" Roosevelt's attorney general and secretary of the navy.

A NOVEL ENTERPRISE

THE NEW CHICAGO SUBWAY AND ITS QUIET CONSTRUCTION.

An Underground Railroad Built Under the Heart of the City Without Attracting Attention — Arrangements For Handling Freight.

New York has just opened a subway, and Chicago, not to be outdone, is also going to have one shortly and beat New York in length of system. The Chicago subway has not attracted much attention in comparison with that given the great underground railroad recently opened in New York. In fact, even in Chicago itself, few persons knew until two years ago that such a work was under construction. Yet over twenty miles of the subway will be opened on Jan 1, and the total length of the system is nearly sixty miles. The New York subway, at present the longest underground railroad in operation, is only about twenty-two miles in extent. Both this and the Chicago enterprise are remarkable feats of engineering. The most important difference between them consists in the fact that while the New York underground railway is for passenger traffic that in Chicago is for freight.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about the Chicago subway is the quiet way in which it has come into existence. About four years ago a franchise was given to a company for building conduits for telephone wires and other wires of corporations furnishing public utilities. Corporations which scented opposition to their monopolies in the new project contrived to have a clause inserted in the franchise providing that the company should not tear up a foot of pavement or disturb the surface of the roadways in any manner on pain of forfeiture of its plant. It was supposed that this provision had put an effectual quietus on the new concern. No work appeared to be going on. Not a foot of pavement had been torn up, and there was no sign of anything being done. What was the surprise of the mayor and council one day about two years ago on being told that seven miles of subways under all the principal streets of the business district had been completed and that they had been built large enough not merely to carry the wires of telephone and telegraph and lighting companies, but to permit the operation of trains of small cars for conveyance of freight.

The statement seemed beyond belief, but a tour through the subways soon convinced the doubters. Down twenty-four feet or more under the heart of Chicago this work had been going on for nearly two years, and not a sign of it appeared on the surface. Surveys were made, and the tunnels were run under the centers of streets so as not to conflict with the foundations of the skyscrapers, for which Chicago is famous. Basements were rented at intervals along the routes, and debris was carried away at night through coal holes in the sidewalk, so that it did not attract attention. The initial point of the system was at one of the busiest parts of Chicago, and it is stated in illustration of the quiet way in which the work was done that even the policeman on the beat supposed it was a job of repairing in a saloon cellar.

The right to use the tunnels for transportation of freight was not easily obtained, but when won the merchants of Chicago began to see the advantage of the system. Work was pushed for the extension of the tunnels, and a large number of merchants entered into contracts with the company. The tunnels are of two sizes. The trunk lines, which run along the chief streets, are twelve feet six inches high and a little over eleven feet wide, and the branch lines, which run off into intersecting streets, are six feet wide and seven feet six inches high. The tunnels run from twenty-four to forty feet below the surface. Business houses will have connection with them so as to receive and discharge freight, coal will be delivered and its transportation through the streets above avoided, and United States mails and newspapers will be distributed by the tunnel routes.

Merchandise will be deposited in the basements of the railway terminals direct from the underground roads. The freight cars are a little more than ten feet long and have a capacity of fifteen tons each, and they are drawn by small electric locomotives. The car wheel and third rail system is used. The Chicago Subway company, which has recently taken over the stock of the company that built the tunnels, is capitalized at $50,000,000. Another subway for Chicago has also been planned, and this will be for passenger traffic.

A Test of Sobriety.

Gentlemen who have put an enemy into their mouths are recommended to try a very simple test for the purpose of finding out whether their brains have been stolen. They must stand erect with their eyes closed, and if they can perform this feat for a brief period they may come to the conclusion that they are all right. Two individuals who were accused of drunkenness at Pontefract proved that they had honorably stood the test, and the cases against them were dismissed. The great merit of the plan is that it can be put into operation anywhere and at any time.—London Tit-Bits.

Merits His Fate.

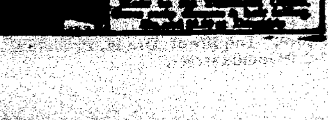
No More Suffering

If you are troubled with indigestion get a bottle of Kodol Dyspepsia Cure and see how quickly it will cure you. Geo. A. Thomson of Spencer, Ia., says: "Have had Dyspepsia for twenty years. My case was almost hopeless. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure was recommended and I used a few bottles of it and it is the only thing that has relieved me. Would not be without it. Have doctored with local physicians and also at Chicago, and even went to Norway with hopes of getting some relief, but Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is the only remedy that has done me any good, and I heartily recommend it. Every person suffering with Indigestion or Dyspepsia should use it." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.



Toothbrushes.

The Buffalo Commercial records that a customer asked one of the women at the counter in a Main street drug store if he could take home some toothbrushes "on approval." The somewhat astonished young woman answered that she did not believe that the firm would allow it. "Now, possibly that strikes you as improbable," said the man in charge of the pharmacy counter, "but only last week I personally sold to a woman a toothbrush. Yesterday she brought it back and said it hurt her mouth and asked if we would be willing to exchange it."

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Too many people have a habit of going with their bristles up.

It is seldom one hears an interesting lie, though the people surely get enough practice.

The first question asked in every home by every member of the family returning from an absence on the streets is "Where's mother?"

There are two complaints which can usually be made of every woman: She has too much patience with her sons and not enough with their father.

Talk about a man fussing about the family bills! You should hear a countrywoman who makes butter talk to her folks when they dip into her cream.

It is a good thing to keep at least one building in the course of erection in a small town. It gives the people a place to go and find fault on a Sunday, outside of the regular churchgoing.—Atchison Globe.

Head About to Burst From Severe Bilious Attack.

"I had a severe billious attack and felt like my head was about to burst, when I got hold of a free sample of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. I took a dose of them after supper and the next day felt like a new man and have been feeling happy ever since," says J. W. Smith of Juliff, Texas. For billiousness, stomach troubles and constipation these tablets have no equal. Price 25 cents for sale by H. C. Giesler.

The Real Shillalah.

The shillalah, accounted Ireland's national weapon of defense, was originally a common blackthorn stick, but in modern times it has been replaced by the more wiry ash sapling. The real shillalah is a young shoot of the sloe shrub or blackthorn pulled by the root from the crevice of some rock. After being trimmed it is placed in the smoke of turf peat, which softens the hard fiber, and when it has reached a condition as pliant as rubber it is straightened. When cooled in the air it becomes as strong and firm as iron. The trimming process is then continued, and when it is desired to make a particularly handsome weapon the spus, so effective in a melee or faction fight, are ornamented with small brass nails.

RECTOR OF ST. LUKE'S,

Ashburnham, Ontario, Testifies to the Good Qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Ashburnham, Ont., April 18, 1903.—I think that it is only right that I should tell you what a wonderful effect Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has produced. The day before Easter I was so distressed with a cold and cough that I did not think to be able to take any duties the next day, as my voice was almost choked by the cough. The same day I received an order from you for a bottle of your Cough Remedy. I at once procured a sample bottle, and took about three doses of the medicine. To my great relief the cough and cold had completely disappeared and I was able to preach three times on Easter day. I know that this rapid and effective cure was due to Cough Remedy. I make this testimony without solicitation, being thankful to have found such a God-sent remedy. Respectfully yours,

E. A. LANGFELDT, M. A.

Washing Butter.

In washing butter use only pure water. Pasteurize the water if necessary. Use a good quantity of water in washing, as much as there was of cream or more. Wash the butter a second time if the first water is milky. Gauge the temperature of the water to leave the butter at a right temperature, 50 to 55 degrees, depending upon conditions for working.

Retelling a Joke.

A west side man heard a joke, new to him, the other day, and the first thing he did upon reaching home for dinner was to tell it to his wife. "Mary," he said, "here's a new joke that's mighty good. One man says, 'The theater caught fire last night.' 'Did they save anything?' the second man asks. 'Yes,' says the first, 'they carried out the programme.' Isn't that a good one?" His wife said it was, and next day she tried it on her grocer. "Mr. Blank," she said, "here's a new joke for you. One man says, 'The theater caught fire last night.' Another asks, 'Did they save anything?' 'Yes,' replies the first, 'they went on with the programme and finished it.' Isn't that a fine joke?" The grocer said it was excellent, but confidentially he acknowledges that he hasn't yet seen the point.—Kansas City Times.

Sick Blood

Feed pale girls on Scott's Emulsion.

We do not need to give all the reasons why Scott's Emulsion restores the strength and flesh and color of good health to those who suffer from sick blood.

The fact that it is the best preparation of Cod Liver Oil, rich in nutrition, full of healthy stimulation is a suggestion as to why it does what it does.

Scott's Emulsion presents Cod Liver Oil at its best, fullest in strength, least in taste.

Young women in their "teens" are permanently cured of the peculiar disease of the blood which shows itself in paleness, weakness and nervousness, by regular treatment with Scott's Emulsion.

It is a true blood food and is naturally adapted to the cure of the blood sickness from which so many young women suffer.

We will be glad to send a sample to any sufferer.

MARRIED.

Mr. James Ward and Miss Ella Beels, both of this city, were united in marriage in Toronto, Ca., on Dec. 14, by the Rev. George Ferguson.

Last Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock at the home of the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Campbell in Erie street, occurred the marriage of Miss Susie Campbell to Mr. Richard Grigson, both of this city, the Rev. John Richards speaking the sacred words which linked the two lives. The home was prettily decorated by Mr. Burr Sheldon, white and pink ribbons and doves being used in profusion, and the forty invited guests in evening attire completed a very harmonious scene. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Thomas Button, aunt of the bride. The bride was gowned becomingly in skirt of dove color and white satin waist with lace trimmings. She was attended by Miss Lulu Newsbaum as maid, who wore light blue. Little Miss Edith Campbell was ring-bearer and she well performed the office, looking most fairy like in her gown of light blue mull. The groom was attended by Mr. Joseph Murphy as best man. After congratulations, a wedding supper was served and Mr. and Mrs. Grigson left on the evening train for New York city where they will spend the Holidays with friends. Upon their return to this city they will reside in a newly furnished home in Hannibal street.

The apple on which Mr. Beckstedt took the silver medal was of the Garden Royal variety, and the only one of its kind in this part of the State. Western New York, by the edict of the Exposition, retains supremacy as the finest apple growing section in the world.

BRISTOL HILL CHURCH.

An Enjoyable Entertainment Given By Fulton Talent.

The entertainment given at the Bristol Hill Church last Friday evening was a success in every way. The program was furnished entirely by Fulton talent. Miss Wooley appeared in several readings and was generously encored each time. The Fulton male quartette, consisting of Messrs. McFarland, Bennett, Allen and Gilbert, sang a number of pleasing selections, establishing their fame as soloists among the people of Volney. The piano solo by Mrs. Ovid Taft was well received and she responded with an encore. Judging from the first number, the course to be given this Winter will be a most excellent one. The attendance was large. The next number will be a lecture on "America's Wonderland," by Rev. S. D. Robinson, on Friday evening, Jan. 13, 1905.

At the close of the entertainment a supper was given those who took part and a few others, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Vant. This feature of the occasion was thoroughly enjoyed.

BRISTOL HILL.

Christmas Sunday will be fittingly observed at the church with an appropriate sermon and special music. Service at 10:30 a. m., followed by Sunday school at noon.

Prayer meeting on Thursday at 7:30 p. m. at the church.

On Monday evening, Dec. 26, the children will present a Christmas cantata in the church. They have been practicing for some time and will, it is expected, give it in a most pleasing manner. There will be a Christmas tree in connection with it

Several new things have been installed in the church of late. All the pews have been provided with envelope-holders and neatly printed collection envelopes; a handsome oak clock has been placed on the wall, and a fine 4x6 blackboard has been secured for the Sunday school.

The first number in the popular entertainment course given last Friday evening was thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience present. The success of the course is assured.

U. S. CRUISER CHICAGO

Clarence Partrick's Experience on Board Vessel in Southern Waters—Crossing the Equator—Is Now a Thorough "Salt."

Mr. Clarence M. Partrick is employed as machinist on board the United States Cruiser Chicago. This is the commodore vessel of the fleet which is now cruising in South American waters, their destination being San Francisco. Mr. Partrick has written the following interesting account of his voyage to his mother, Mrs. J. D. Partrick of Cayuga street. A unique feature of the letter is a graphic description of the treatment "landlubbers" receive on their trip across the Equator.

The letter is dated Port Castries, Island of St. Lucas, Friday, Nov. 25, 1904. After the usual greetings, Mr. Partrick states:

"It was a five-days run from Hampton Roads to San Juan, P. R. We reached the latter port Nov. 22, and after coaling ship, left on the 23d. San Juan is delightfully situated; in fact, the Island of Porto Rico affords beautiful scenery as far as the eye can see. When in San Juan harbor, boatmen crowded around our vessel, offering all kinds of fruit for sale. We purchased bananas, oranges and allegator pears at very reasonable prices. An interesting sight in the harbor were the old Spanish forts; one of them, El Moro, bore the marks of shells which were evidences of the bombardment at the time of the Spanish-American war.

"We sailed for the Island of St. Lucas which is distant from Porto Rico about 400 miles. On our arrival we find the docks crowded with colored men and women who are ready to coal ship. This island is under British rule. Port Castries is a small place situated at the foot of a mountain. [illegible] island is a range of moun- [illegible] Martinique. I was on watch duty at the time, but went on deck to see Mount Pelee, which was emitting vapor from the subterranean depths.

"Yesterday was Thanksgiving Day, and notwithstanding we were at sea, we had an excellent dinner composed of roast chicken, dressing, cranberry sauce, mashed potatoes, and pie for dessert.

"Dec. 2—At sea en route to Bahia, Brazil. Regret I did not have time to finish and mail letter at Port Castries. We only took a small amount of coal on board and proceeded on our journey. So far, we have had a pleasant voyage. No severe weather has been encountered, and strange to relate, I have not been sea sick. The weather in this longitude is warm throughout the year, which is a decided contrast to that you are experiencing in Fulton.

"Yesterday was a gala day with us. We crossed the Equator on the 30th at 7:30 p. m. The members of the crew who had crossed before had the captain's permission to initiate all 'land-lubbers,' so that at 7:30 on the 30th, the ship was supposed to be hailed from a distance by Neptune, who desired his messenger to come aboard with mail to be distributed among the uninitiated. The messenger at first paid his respects to the captain, who kindly volunteered to turn over the command of his vessel to His Majesty, Neptune, the next day.

"In the meanwhile, the following communication was received by yours respectfully:

U. S. S. CHICAGO,

Whereas, It having been heralded by mother Cary's chickens that the above named man-of-war is to be in Our Domain on the 30th inst., and looking over the Roster, have come to the conclusion that it is high time for the sad and wandering nautical soul of C. M. Partrick to appear before the High Tribunal of Neptune.

Resolved, That we demand the presence of the above in body, mind and soul, on the Spar Deck, of aforesaid man-of-war, and then and there to give an account of life, and render unto the High Court and Royal Sign of Neptune the everlasting respect which is due them. Fail not!! Penalty will be horrible incarceration in Davy Jones' Locker.

SCRUBANDWASHCLOTHES,
Lord High Executioner.
HOLYSTONETHEDECKS,
Chief Clerk of High Tribunal.

"The next morning at 8:30 o'clock Neptune came up from between decks accompanied with a bodyguard, consisting of Lady Amphrite, Davy Jones, a judge, chaplain, secretary, a barber, barber's cat, chief of police, chief of detectives, policemen, detectives, a doctor and two dog boys and bears. They formed in line and led by the ship's band, paraded around the decks. Then the captain surrendered control of the ship to Neptune, who hoisted his ensign at the masthead, when the fun began. These dignitaries assembled on a platform, and the remainder of the gang lined up to receive the members of the uninitiated crew as fast as they could be found.

"There was a smooth plank set at an incline and held at one end by a trip. After the physician prescribed medicine for the unfortunate ones, the victim was then laid on the plank, when some flour and molasses was unceremoniously spilled over him and he was shaved by the barber; then the plank was tipped and without more ado he was neatly dropped into a large tank of water which was about 20x20 feet, in which were dogs and bears, who took great pleasure in thoroughly ducking each one. It was great fun for the onlookers and was kept up all day. No candidate escaped, owing to the vigilence of the police and detectives. Frequently a victim would take refuge in the rigging, but he was soon captured and brought before His Imperial Majesty, Neptune. When the vessel arrives at San Francisco, proper certificates will be distributed to those who were initiated."

The foregoing letter was mailed at Bahia, and it was hoped the squadron would reach San Francisco on or about Jan. 20, 1905. Mr. Partrick is enjoying the voyage very much.

SENATORIAL CONTEST

No Factional Fight in County. An Amicable Adjustment of Alleged Complication in the State will Be Effected.

There will be no contention in Oswego County over the selection of a United States Senator. The management of Republican interests are in capable hands. Judge Merrick Stowell, Hon. N. N. Stranahan, State Committeeman John T. Mott and State Excise Commissioner P. W. Cullinan, who have the best interests of the party at heart, are seeking an amicable adjustment of the alleged complication.

Notwithstanding Judge Stowell was recently called to New York to attend the conference held by Governor Odell and Collector Stranahan later took an active part in the Platt conference, there is no desire on the part of the leaders for a factional fight in the county.

Collector Stranahan, who spent a few days in this city last week, stated to a TIMES representative that when the opportune time arrived a man would be selected to represent the Empire State in the United States Senate who would be acceptable to a united Republican party; one who would dignify the office and fully measure up to the standard of excellence required.

"Those of us," continued Mr. Stranahan, "who have passed through a period of factional strife in the party know something of the bitterness that follows in its train. Peace and harmony will therefore attend its councils and the proper man will be selected without any friction."

ABOUT TAX RATIOS.

Oswego One of Four Places in Which Tax Rate is Increased.

[Oswego Palladium.]

With the exception of the city of Fulton all tax ratios for the various towns of the county have been worked by the Supervisors, and with four exceptions are lower than last year. The increase in tax ratio comes to the city of Oswego, towns of Orwell, Oswego and Parish. Supervisor Worden says that the increased ratio in Oswego Town was due to several reasons. Last year he says the ratio was so low that it didn't produce money enough. Then again there was a deficiency in 1902 in connection with the town abstract.

U. S. CRUISER CHICAGO

Clarence Partrick's Experience on Board Vessel in Southern Waters—Crossing the Equator—Is Now a Thorough "Salt."

Mr. Clarence M. Partrick is employed as machinist on board the United States Cruiser Chicago. This is the commodore vessel of the fleet which is now cruising in South American waters, their destination being San Francisco. Mr. Partrick has written the following interesting account of his voyage to his mother, Mrs. J. D. Partrick of Cayuga street. A unique feature of the letter is a graphic description of the treatment "land-lubbers" receive on their trip across the Equator.

The letter is dated Port Castries, Island of St. Lucia, Friday, Nov. 25, 1904. After the usual greetings, Mr. Partrick states:

"It was a five days run from Hampton Roads to San Juan, P. R. We reached the latter port Nov. 22, and after coaling ship, left on the 23d. San Juan is delightfully situated; in fact, the Island of Porto Rico affords beautiful scenery as far as the eye can see. When in San Juan harbor, boatmen crowded around our vessel, offering all kinds of fruit for sale. We purchased bananas, oranges and alligator pears at very reasonable prices. An interesting sight in the the harbor were the old Spanish forts; one of them, El Moro, bore the marks of shells which were evidences of the bombardment at the time of the Spanish-American war.

"We sailed for the Island of St. Lucia which is distant from Porto Rico about 400 miles. On our arrival we find the docks crowded with colored men and women who are ready to coal ship. This island is under British rule. Port Castries is a small place situated at the foot of a mountain. The entire island is a range of mountains.

"We passed en route the Island of Martinique. I was on watch duty at the time, but went on deck to see Mount Pelee, which was emitting vapor from the subterranean depths.

"Yesterday was Thanksgiving Day, and notwithstanding we were at sea, we had an excellent dinner composed of roast chicken, dressing, cranberry sauce, mashed potatoes, and pie for dessert.

"Dec. 2—At sea en route to Bahia, Brazil. Regret I did not have time to finish and mail letter at Port Castries. We only took a small amount of coal on board and proceeded on our journey. So far, we have had a pleasant voyage. No severe weather has been encountered, and strange to relate, I have not been sea sick. The weather in this longitude is warm throughout the year, which is a decided contrast to that you are experiencing in Fulton.

"Yesterday was a gala day with us. We crossed the Equator on the 30th at 7:30 p. m.
